California Valley Town Wrecked By Quake

11 Tremors Damage Business Area of Calipatria; Shock Felt in San Diego

Calipatria, Calif., July 29 (AP).—The tenth severe earth shock in the past 72 hours convinced many residents today—they started leaving this quake-damaged city.

Before the day was over the eleventh shock had rattled loose plaster and shaken a few more bricks out of buildings.

In between the 11 sharp jolts there have been dozens of slighter rumblings throughout the Imperial Valley floor

Chief of Police Bob Merrill said there was no panic but many husbands have moved their wives and children to the homes of relatives elsewhere in the State. They fear worse quakes are coming.

The quakes were felt sharply more than 100 miles to the south and west of San Diego. The tenth and strongest of the quakes came at 6:38 (PST) today. Calipatria, some 34 miles north of the Mexican border, apparently was on or near the epicenter.

Much of the business district of this town of 2000 was damaged in the sharpest jolt. It cracked all the 15 business buildings on Main Street but there were no injuries.

Plate glass fronts of store buildings were smashed. Bottled goods were smashed and plaster fell. The hotel Bel Del Lingo evacuated all of its guests—many in nightclothes—after a 25-foot-long crack appeared in the lobby.

In this desert land of 115-degree temperatures, many of the store buildings have stucco canopies over the sidewalks. The jolts toppled several of these onto the street.

Merrill closed and roped off the town's business district. He said only the service stations and one tavern were allowed open.

The town's residential area was not as hard hit.

The jolts caused mudpots and steam geysers to spurt out of the ground in a number of farm pastures. Irrigation men believed this was caused by the earth cracks tapping irrigation water under pressure.

The Alamo River also bubbled in spots where the quakes had split the river bed.

El Centro and Brawley, largest cities in the area, also were jolted by the shocks but damage there was slight. The shocks were felt as far to the east as Yuma on the Arizona border.

4 Hurt as Auto Chased by Police Crashes Into Bus

Four persons were hurt early today when an automobile chased for six blocks by a police scout car crashed into a Greyhound bus at Wisconsin ave. and Van Ness st.

Pvt. William Stein and his partner in Scout 83 reported they pursued the speeding car from Ward Circ. to the scene of the accident.

One person in the car was hurled to the street, and another partially under the bus. These and a third occupant of the car, and a passenger on the bus, were taken to Emergency Hospital.

The three men in the car were Navy personnel. They were not immdiately identified.

Police Battle Belgian Rioters As Troops Guard Key Points

Brussels, July 29 (AP).—Mounted gendarmes tonight charged rioters at full gallop, with drawn sabers, in the bloodiest clash in Brussels since King Leopold returned from exile a week ago.

Taking drastic new measures to deal with the anti-Leopoldist riots, the government ordered troops to occupy power stations, telephone exchanges and other places.

Two battalions also were reported to have been recalled from occupation duties in Germany. The Cabinet declared a state of emergency in Liege and banned all public meetings there and in the Brussels and Verviers areas.

During tonight's clash cobblestones were torn from the side streets and rained down on foot gendarmes just before the mounted police arrived, apparently in response to a single rifle shot.

The demonstrators sang French revolutionary songs and howled for Leopold's abdication.

Ambulances carried off the injured rioters and at least one of the gendarmes. There was no immediate estimate of the casualties. Women were among the injured. The face of one woman was streaming with blood, and one of her legs was torn open from knee to ankle.

By 9 p. m. Brussels was still in a state of siege. Tonight's crowd was far larger than the morning gathering had been and seemed in an angrier mood.

Violence was reported at several other places in the country. At Lessines a stationmaster reported a saboteur had been killed while trying to plant a bomb. Demonstrators smashed store windows and marched with an effigy of the King at Ghent. They threw themselves across railroad tracks at Mons in an attempt to halt trains.

Certain army units were ordered brought up immediately to full war strength. A decree gave increased powers to provincial governors, enabling them to seize public buildings, ban meetings and take other precautions.

With anti-Leopoldists busily preparing a massive "march on Brussels" for Tuesday, it did not seem likely the government orders, especially the ban on public meetings, would be heeded.

Housewives began forming queues at Brussels stores, as if laying in food for a siege.

The upheaval of strikes and violence threatened to spread into a separatist movement and split

Truman Expected to Get More Control Power Than He Asked

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Congress is hell-bent to give President Truman more power than he has asked for to crack down on the growing inflation and probably will do so this week.

This became obvious yesterday as various members of Congress spoke up on the subject.

Just what Congress will vote beyond the limited mobilization bill sent to the Hill by the Administration was not clear. Best guess was that it would be standby price, wage and rationing controls. Congressional leaders probably will get a tip from Mr. Truman at their Monday morning White House meeting on just what he would be happy to accept in the unusual situation.

The New York Herald Tribune reported last night that the National Security Resources Board has all prepared a 21-point legislative program to give the President wartime powers to slap rigid controls on the national economy and launch all-out mobilization. The newspaper said the program asked by Mr. Truman was a part of the NSRB plan.

The Washington Post was told yesterday that a copy of this plan was made available to the Senate Banking Committee for its guidance in case the groundswell for

Reservists Soon to Learn Service Status

Those in Essential Jobs to Get Time To Train Others

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

A Government-wide policy on the induction of reserve officers in civilian jobs is about to be issued by the Defense Department. In general, it will follow along these lines:

Reservists who can be spared and who are in nonessential jobs and who are needed by the military will be subject to immediate call;

Those who are in essential jobs and who are needed by the services will be given six months to train people to take their jobs before they are to report for active duty;

Reservists in key managerial jobs will have their cases reconsidered every six months, each case to be decided on its merits. There will be no blanket deferment for them, and,

Reservists in important scientific and technical work as well as investigative work such as the FBI will be passed over for the time being except in those special cases where they are urgently needed by the defense agencies.

The whole thought behind the plan is to place the reservists in jobs, civilian and military, where they will contribute most to the war.

Hundreds of top Government officials hold reserve commissions. The Federal civilian service would be riddled if they were all called into active service. Furthermore, the defense agencies don't need them all at this time.

LONGER HOURS? You can expect additional civilians in the war

Bowles, Benton And McMahon Renominated

Hartford, Conn., July 29 (AP).—Connecticut Democrats today named Governor Chester Bowles and United States Senators Brien McMahon and William Benton to head their ticket in the fall elections.

Bowles and McMahon were renominated by acclamation at the State convention. Benton had to beat off a challenge from former Lieutenant Governor Wilbert Snow. Snow withdrew from the contest early in a roll call when he was trailing, 384 to 19.

Republicans have named former United States Representative Joseph Talbot to oppose McMahon.

In the only other floor battle, Joseph W. Bogdanski, Meriden City Court judge, defeated Chester Lewandowski for the Congressman-at-large nomination by an uncounted vote.

Brother and Friend Hurt

Gen. Bradshaw's Sister Dies Instantly as Car Hits Tree

Miss Charlotte Bradshaw, sister of Brig. Gen. Aaron Bradshaw, jr., was instantly killed late yesterday when the car she was driving crashed into a tree at Fort Lesley J. McNair.

Post officials said Miss Bradshaw, a paraplegic, was driving a car with especially designed controls. They said she apparently stepped on the gas instead of the brake as she drove along First Avenue, skirting the Potomac seawall. The car angled off the road toward the seawall before it struck a tree.

Passengers in the car were Miss Bradshaw's brother, Robert C. Bradshaw of 1711 Holly st. nw., and Col. James M. Cawood, 40, of 213 S. Fairfax st., Alexandria, who is stationed at the Pentagon. Both were taken to Casualty Hospital where Bradshaw was admitted for treatment of head injuries, and Colonel Cawood was undergoing X-ray studies.

Miss Bradshaw, about 50, made her home with her brother, Brigadier General Bradshaw, in Quarters 5 at Fort McNair.

A 72-year-old Alexandria man was killed instantly last night when trying to cross Route 1 about three miles south of Alexandria.

Police said Roy Molair, of Route 4, Alexandria, was halfway across the road, when, frightened by the

2 Arrested As Atom Spy Conspirators

Engineering Firm Head and Secretary Helped Gold Frame Story, He Tells Jury

Cliffwood, N. J., July 29 (U.P.).—A chemical engineer and his woman secretary, who allegedly covered up for a key Soviet atomic spy and possibly delayed "cracking" the "Fuchs espionage ring" for two years, were arrested by FBI agents here today.

Abraham Brothman, 37, former employer of confessed spy courier Harry Gold, and Miriam Moscowitz, 34, his secretary, were arrested at the Ulster Chemical Co., which they own. They were charged with arranging with Gold to lie to a 1947 New York grand jury investigating possible espionage.

Grand Jury Races Time

The charges were handed down after Gold appeared before a new grand jury which convened in an unusual Saturday session in New York City. The jury handed down indictments against the pair in a race against time. The statute of limitations on the charges runs out Tuesday and it was indicated that the time problem kept the jury from handing down actual espionage indictments.

Specifically, Brothman and Miss Moscowitz were accused of setting up a false story of how Gold and Brothman met in connection with Gold's admitted spy work. Brothman also was indicted for "attempting to impede and obstruct the due administration of justice."

With Miss Moscowitz as the "brains" behind the scheme, Gold and Brothman agreed to tell the 1947 grand jury that they met through Jacob Golos, a Soviet spy now dead, instead of through Semen M. Semenov, an official of the Russian Amtorg Trading Corp., according to FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover in Washington.

May Have Delayed Probe

Although neither the indictment nor Hoover said so in so many words, it was indicated that the "rehearsed" story may have held up the FBI investigation and that perhaps, had the true story been told, the G-men would have been able to "crack" the spy ring years earlier.

Brothman, medium-built and quiet in manner, and Miss Moscowitz were arrested at about 4 p. m. (EDT) by the FBI. He was taken to the Federal House of Detention in New York and she was taken to the Women's House of Detention there, pending arraignment on Monday.

Brothman employed Gold in the laboratory of his engineering firm, A. Brothman Associates, Inc., Elmhurst, Long Island, until June, 1948.

United States Attorney Irving Saypol said the indictments are

Joint Chiefs Agree On Standing Forces U. S. Must Maintain

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have reached an agreement on the size of active military forces the United States must maintain on a reasonably permanent basis in light of the general world situation apart from the Korean war.

Achievement of this condition of greater readiness is aimed for by early 1953 and will be financed under the current 1951 regular and supplemental appropriations and the 1952 military budget now nearing completion at the Pentagon. Not counting costs of the Korean fighting, the latter is expected to run 19 to 20 billions.

What is this new level of our armed forces that the Department of Defense chiefs are planning—and are certain to get if there is not a radical change in global tensions?

Outlines of Plan

There has been no announcement of the program—beyond the first step to be taken under the 10.5 billion dollar supplement budget asked by President Truman. But on the basis of this, prior plans for expanding the forces and an authoritative Capitol Hill announce-

'No Retreat, No Surrender'

Yanks Ordered to Hold or Die, Or Face Communist 'Butchery'

By Homer Bigart
NYHT News Service

With American Forces in Korea (Sunday) July 30.—Hwanggan fell to the North Korean Communists yesterday morning, just before Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker issued a dramatic stand-or-die order to his outnumbered, hard-pressed Yanks.

While Communist spearheads were threatening to cut off the bulk of American troops from the sea, General Walker firmly ruled out any thought of surrender or evacuation.

The tough, stubby general, a corps commander in the late Gen. George S. Patton's Third Army during World War II, issued his "no retreat, no surrender" order at a confernce of grim-faced field officers in headquarters of the First Cavalry Division near the Hwanggan front.

There could be no hope of a Dunkerque, General Walker said. Mass evacuation by sea would be "impossible."

After the conference Walker told reporters he was confident of success and that reinforcements soon would reach Korea. "But I know we are in for some hard knocks

Girl, 17, Drowns In Potomac on Church Outing

Joanne Estes, 17, of Arlington, Va., drowned yesterday in the Potomac at Freestone Point, south of Alexandria.

She was one of 18 members of the Cherrydale Methodist Church who went on a picnic organized by the Rev. Harry W. Craven.

Witnesses told police the girl, daughter of Ellery Estes, 3227 N. 20th rd., Arlington, Va., went wading with several companions after lunch, and was caught in an undertow.

In her panic she fought off attempts to pull her out, it was said.

The undertow was so strong that rowboats had to be used to rescue the other waders.

Rescue squads from Alexandria, Penn Daw, Occoquan and Quantico recovered the body after a five-hour search.

200 Factories Get $4 Billion Plane Order

NYHT News Service

The United States Air Force ordered 200 aircraft manufacturers yesterday to start production immediately on an estimated four billion dollars worth of military aircraft.

No details as to numbers or types of planes were released, and the aircraft companies were forbidden to release such information. However, before the Korean crisis, the "normal" armed services budget included $1,350,000,000 for construction of 1383 aircraft, type not specified.

The new mobilization development came as President Truman prepared to ask Congress for another four billion dollars in arms aid for Atlantic Pact and other free nations, and Congress was told that even the present peacetime record-breaking military budget of more than 25 billion dollars may not be enough to stem the tide of Communist aggression.

The Air Force announced the giant order—the first since President Truman asked Congress for an additional $10,500,000,000 in new war funds as a result of the Korean crisis—even before Congress has appropriated the money for it.

Letters of intent were used instead of contracts because, as a spokesman explained, "Technically we have no money now but we believe it is Congress' intent to provide it."

The move puts the Air Force on the way toward a 69-group strength. At present it has 48 groups. Expansion plans call for 58 groups in 12 months, and 69 groups by January 1, 1953.

1st Cavalry Battles to Rescue Patrol Cut Off in Red Ambush

With the U. S. 1st Cavalry Division (Sunday), July 30. (U.P.).—A 1st Cavalry reconnaissance force was cut off behind a strong enemy ambush 18 miles south of Kumchon on the road to Kochang today as the North Korean drive appeared to swing southwest of the main American force at Hwanggan.

The cavalry force originally was ambushed early Saturday by a roadblock the North Koreans set up behind the Americans. A reinforced platoon was sent to the rescue. The reinforcements fought a hot battle with the Communists and succeeded only in getting a small portion of the men out of the trap.

A third American force has been sent south to engage the enemy and knock out the road block.

Military spokesmen said the enemy ambushing force poured heavy machine-gun and mortar fire from both sides of the road on the lightly armed American column.

The battle lines remained the same throughout the night with an exchange of artillery and mortar fire. Early Sunday the enemy opened up with tank fire on the American right flank.

After a week in the line, the Tokyo, Sunday, July 30 (AP).—North Korean troops today were reported only 10 miles from the communications center of Kumchon in a surprise drive threatening to envelop the very center of the U. S. position in South Korea.

Two other Red thrusts farther south had swept to within 55 miles or so of Pusan, major American port and supply base at the southeast tip of Korea.

The Reds in the Kumchon area appeared to be the biggest immediate threat, however.

Nearby Village Taken

The threat to Kumchon came with Communist capture of the village of Chirye, only ten miles south of the vital communication and supply center.

Associated Press Correspondent William Moore reported from the field that an American reconnaissance platoon was ambushed on the road at a point 18 road miles south of Kumchon.

Chirye is on the main Kochang-Kumchon railway, 30 airline miles northwest of Taegu.

Reports about the ambush were sketchy. However, they indicated that North Korean machineguns pinned down one American platoon. It was rescued by another in a fierce fight.

Casualties on either side were not reported.

The strength of the enemy force was not determined, but it was advancing northward toward Kumchon and reached Chirye.

Kumchon is on the main supply route from Pusan. It is 15 miles or so behind the center of the American front east of fallen Hwanggan.

Kumchon controls not only the main supply road but also one of the main lateral roads leading to U. S. and South Korean positions northeast of Hwanggan. Kumchon is about 80 miles northwest of Pusan.

The Reds, driven back on the center of the front, appeared to have launched a great wheeling

U. S. Casualties In Korea 1086; Red Loss 31,000

American casualties reported from the Korean fighting front yesterday had passed the 1000 mark.

Casualty reports include those killed in action, wounded, died of wounds, injured (in accidents) and missing in action. Some soldiers reported missing after being cut off by enemy troops subsequently have made their way back to U. S. lines.

Publication of casualty lists Nos. 46 and 47 yesterday raised the total number of casualties to 1086. This includes a number of men who turned up safe after having been reported missing.

A spokesman for General MacArthur said yesterday that by conservative estimate the North Koreans have lost 31,000 men killed and wounded since the war started.

Gen. Eisenhower Ready If Army Needs Him

Denver, July 29 (AP).—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, former Army chief of staff, said tonight he is ready to go again if the Army needs him.

Eisenhower, president of Columbia University, said in an interview: "I've been in touch with the Defense Department several times. I've told them I'm ready to go."

Here on vacation, Eisenhower said America must go all out to win the battle in Korea, or find itself in trouble all over the world.

Walker Tells GIs To Hold Line or Die

before we are absolutely secure," he said.

The Korean campaign has very definitely entered a critical phase, the general warned. It was necessary to hold every inch of ground. There was no intention of falling back to a tight beachhead around the port of Pusan, at the southeastern tip of Korea.

The Americans must hold or die on the present lines, he said. That was as good a place as any in which to win or die, he added.

Surrender would invite "a fate worse than death," Walker said.

"My people have been imbued with the necessity of not giving another inch of ground," he told reporters. "Everybody in this Army knows we must hold along the line we now have.

"There is no doubt in the mind of anybody that even if we were so disposed there could not possibly be a Dunkerque. It would be impossible for us to get out."

"No individual, squad, company or higher unit will under any circumstances surrender, because all realize that being prisoners of these people would be a fate worse than death."

[The United Press quoted Walker as saying, "We cannot think of giving ground to the enemy, and any man who does will personally be responsible for the death of thousands of his buddies.

["If we back up to Pusan, there will be butchery (of Americans) such as there never has been in history.

"We Are Going to Win"

["We are going to win. Nothing is going to stop us. But every man must fight to the death if necessary until help arrives.

["We are still fighting for time, as we have been from the start," Walker was quoted as saying, "We have done all our resources permitted. However, you all know your means have been rather meager.

["We must fight to the best to hold. The enemy must pay for every inch of ground."]

In his talk to the officers, he was critical of the conduct of squads and platoons under fire. When forced to abandon their foxholes they should keep organized and stick together, rather than scatter and be shot down "like quails or rabbits," he said.

A correspondent asked Walker if he thought the campaign had reached a crisis. "Very certainly," he snapped, "very definitely."

He added: "Nobody should get the idea we are going to evacuate this place. No one has evacuation in mind. Our hopes for reinforcements are very bright. Our supplies are rolling in beautifully."

One correspondent sought his views on a new threat—the rapid advance of Red columns southwest of Taegu and now fewer than 70 air miles from Pusan. Walker replied he had known of this danger for a week.

"So far as our means permitted we have anticipated it," he said. But everyone knows that the means were limited, he added.

Walker's order came two days after his lengthy conference with Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who flew from Tokyo to Eighth Army Headquarters and said on departing that the enemy had "lost his chance of victory."

At First Cavalry Headquarters, Walker conferred with the division commander, Maj. Gen. Hobert R. Gay, and with Maj. Gen. William B. Kean, commander of the Twenty-fifth Division. Accompanying Walker was Maj. Gen. Earle Partridge of the Fifth Air Force.

As Walker spoke, American artillery was pounding Hwanggan. The town was evacuated a few hours earlier after five days of stubborn defense in the mountains by troops under Lieut. Col. John H. Michaelis of Lancaster, Pa., and elements of the First Cavalry.

Colonel Michaelis' men, severely depleted, fell back only 2000 yards and were barely in their new positions east of the town when the Reds launched a new three-pronged attack.

The first withdrawal was well managed. In predawn darkness, the American fighters left their mountain positions under cover of heavy artillery and stumbled down a ravine to the flat fields surrounding the village.

Troops under Lt. John L. Buckley, of New York, provided a rear guard defense of the pass until the bulk of the unit was safe in new positions. There were no casualties, although the escape route was under enemy mortar fire.

Three thousand rounds of artillery hit the Red positions before the withdrawal began. The troops had the satisfaction of seeing one salvo score a direct hit on an enemy 75-mm. mountain gun. "We actually saw wheels, arms and legs fly when we made the hit," said Lt. Millard Fletcher, of Denver.

Outstanding among the men cited for heroism in Colonel Michaeli's unit were M./Sergt. Anthony J. Vander Vliet of Hawthorne, N. J., and Pvt. Leroy S. Haggerty.

After volunteering to repair a wire line during the height of the Red attack Thursday morning, they reached the summit positions just as troops under Lieut. Alfred S. Burnet, of Concord, N. H., were being beaten off. Sergeant Vander Vliet and Private Haggerty grabbed abandoned automatic rifles and formed a rear guard for a column of wounded soldiers.

Vander Vliet knocked out one of two machine guns that were pouring fire on the wounded. Two other men, Sergt. Walter Britt, of Dubois, Nebr., and Pvt. James R. Luh, of Logan, W. Va., led the wounded down a creek bed to safety.

Pentagon Feels Walker Can Hold His New Line

A military spokesman said yesterday that General Walker apparently believes his forces in Korea can hold the line they are now defending.

Walker wouldn't have issued his stand-or-die order, the spokesman suggested at a Pentagon briefing, if he did not believe his forces could hold without exorbitant cost in American lives.

Yanks Battle To Save Patrol

First Cavalry Division appears to have blunted—at least temporarily—the enemy drive down the main Seoul-Taejon-Yongdong highway, forcing him to slide to the south.

Indications are the North Koreans plan to try to by-pass the main First Cavalry front around Hwanggan and head straight for Taegu by way of Kochang or come back up north to catch the division in the rear.

Lieut. William Maddox, of Washington, D. C., an artillery liaison pilot, said he saw three trucks and three jeeps of the First Cavalry reconnaissance force knocked out a mile northwest of Chirye, 10 miles south of Kumchon.

Maddox reported after a flight over the area that he saw what he believed to be North Koreans making a wide flanking movement in the area five miles southeast of Kochang on the road to Taegu, only 35 miles away from them.

Maddox said it appeared the North Koreans were moving south and southwest of 1st Cavalry Division positions in an attempt to get behind the American lines.

South Korean police who tried to halt the Communist flanking movement three miles south of Chirye were shot up badly, Maddox said. He said he saw their bodies laying on the road, along with 22 trucks and other debris.

Maddox said that Kochang, 32 miles southwest of Kumchow, was burning in six places as a result of attacks by American F-51 Mustangs. At least four other Communist-held towns in the area also were burning, he said.

North of Kumchon, two groups of engineers were reported isolated by Communist infiltration. The north group was out of food. The south group was out of both food and water. Supplies were being dropped from planes.

movement by two divisions in the south. Enemy gains of up to 10 miles were reported.

General MacArthur's headquarters in a release said one of the Red columns, about 35 miles south of the Hwanggan sector, thrust 10 miles east before it was stopped. There the invaders were about 30 air miles west of the refugee South Korean capital of Taegu.

The Reds burst through the communications hub of Kachong in their eastward push. Taegu is 56 air miles northwest of the main supply port of Pusan and about 40 miles southwest of the main supply.

Farther to the south along the coast, another Red column lashed out five to 10 miles, headquarters said, before it was stopped by a United Nations force.

This would place the Reds within 55 miles or so of Pusan.

Great Assault Seen

MacArthur's headquarters said the Communists were attacking or executing movements for a probable renewed attack all along the 200-mile front.

Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker, Eighth Army commander, said today "there is no point in not telling the simple truth, which is that the war has reached a critical stage."

He promised, however, "ultimate victory will be ours. Of that I am sure." He said he was confident United States troops although outnumbered, could hold until reinforcements arrive.

The general said the fact the war had reached a critical stage "does not mean that there is pessimism among our men at the front. Indeed there is none."

"They are fighting as soldiers have never fought before and I have complete confidence that we shall be able to hold out until sufficient strength arrives to launch a counter offensive," he said.

Walker yesterday told his two divisional commanders to hold their present lines or die in the effort.

Today he asserted:

"The enemy will be made to pay dearly for every inch of ground that he takes. Our soldiers are now battle tested and, although we are greatly outnumbered, the enemy is finding our resistance greater and greater and his own losses heavier and heavier. Ultimate victory will be ours. Of that I am sure."

Earlier his headquarters had said the pressure had slackened after counterattacks blunted the big Red drive that began Friday.

Associated Press Correspondent William R. Moore in the field reported the American front was quiet after United States First Cavalrymen withdrew yesterday from the key communications center of Hwanggan, 95 miles northwest of Pusan.

Moore said the quiet was broken only by sporadic Red artillery and mortar fire.

The First Cavalry and the adjacent Twenty-fifth Infantry Division made minor adjustments in their lines Saturday night, MacArthur's headquarters said.

The Reds were building up their strength despite ceaseless Allied aerial attack.

The American forces, facing a general assault by possibly 90,000 Red attackers, were under stern orders to die, if necessary, rather than retreat.

(The United Press quoted a communique saying "the Twenty-fourth Regimental Combat Team reported that North Korean troops in American uniforms and with blackened faces tried unsuccessfully to infiltrate their positions." The Twenty-fourth Regiment is a Negro outfit.)

First Cavalry Division units abandoned the rail and highway town of Hwanggan early Saturday, then sent patrols back into the no-man's land.

Patrols found no North Korean troops had entered Hwanggan by midday Saturday.

However, the North Koreans were rushing up masses of artillery, including at least one thought to be a railway gun, through a rail tunnel that U. S. Navy skip-bombers had closed Friday.

General Walker emphasized that "there's no thought in the mind of anybody—even though we might be so disposed—that there possibly can be a Dunkerque. It would be impossible to get out."

Nor was there thought of surrender.

"All realize that to be a prisoner of these people would be a fate worse than death," Walker said.

Tibet Border Guards Killed U. S. Envoy

DOUGLAS S. MACKIERNAN
. . . shot by border guards

By The Associated Press

An American vice consul seeking to escape Communist-held northwest China by a dangerous trek through the lofty Himalayas has been shot to death by Tibetan border guards, the State Department revealed yesterday.

The department termed the killing of Vice Consul Douglas S. Mackiernan a mistake, saying the Tibetans mistook his party for bandits or Communist raiders. Tibet has apologized.

The incident occurred April 13 but was reported only today by the State Department. First news came from a native runner who took 27 days to reach Lhasa, capital of Tibet.

Mackiernan and an American student had been en route by camel caravan from isolated Sinking Province in northwest China since the Communists took over the area last September. They had gone 1200 miles when the border shooting occurred.

Two Natives Also Killed

Two natives, presumably Chinese, also were killed and a third wounded. The other American, Frank Bessac, Lodi, Calif., escaped injury and is now en route to Lhasa.

While on his way, Mackiernan was charged repeatedly in Communist propaganda with organizing Chinese bandits in northwest China into anti-Communist bands. Officials said the charge was repeated only ten days ago by the Moscow radio.

Mackiernan had the duty of closing down the United States consulate at Tihwa, Sinkiang, following the departure of Consul J. Hall Paxton, and two other Americans as Communist forces neared the city. Hall, his wife, and Vice Consul John Dreeson left Tihwa last August and reached India two months later over the same difficult route which Mackiernan and Bessac tackled in September.

Transferred to Camels

Mackiernan's party, which included three native servants, set out by jeep but had to transfer to horses and then to camels. Savage winter storms blocked the mountain passes before they could get through last fall and they spent the winter in a small mountain village awaiting the spring thaws, according to the State Department's sketchy information.

A veteran of five years Air Force service, Mackiernan, 37, entered the foreign service in May, 1947. A 1936 graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, he was employed by the Weather Bureau until he entered the Air Force in 1942.

Naval Reserve Training Set For August

Training cruises of four Naval Air Reserve squadrons at Anacostia, ordered canceled last week, will be held at Quonset Point, R. I., in August after all, a spokesman said yesterday.

The units are Fighter Squadron 665 and Search Squadron 661, due to leave August 6; and Fighter Squadrons 661 and 662, due to leave August 26.

Two other units, Patrol Squadron 661 and Servce Squadron 665, which were to train two weeks in Jacksonville, were held back by last week's order and have had their first week of training at Anacostia. They will go to Norfolk for a week of anti-submarine training.

Three other Anacostia Reserve squadrons returned from their two weeks' training cruise in Pensacola yesterday.

On the medical side, the Council on National Emergency Medical Service of the American Medical Association urged physicians trained at Government expense in World War II to "come forward."

The AMA helped fill the need for physicians during the last war, when more than 45,000 doctors entered the service, said Dr. James C. Sargent, chairman of the council, which is meeting at the Hotel Statler.

A Bolling Air Base spokesman said yesterday that all Air Force reservists recalled to duty from the District, Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and the Carolinas, will be sent to Langley Air Force Base, Va., for processing. They will be ordered to duty stations from there.

Meanwhile, Selective Service officials in Maryland said the State's induction quota for September is 735 men, under the Army's expansion program. Previously, the State had been asked for 294 draftees.

Quotas for the District and Virginia in September are 252 and 1087, respectively. Draft officials said this will mean calling some 23-year-olds. Thus far, only 24 and 25-year-olds have been called.

Socialist Head Wants Canada to Send Troops

Vancouver, B. C., July 29 (U.P.).—The re-elected leader of the Canadian Socialist Party said today he would demand that Canada immediately send ground troops to Korea.

M. J. Coldwell, member of Parliament since 1935, was returned to office last night as national leader and president of the Commonwealth Cooperative Federation.

He said that the CCF's convention at which he was elected reflected almost solid anti-Russian sentiment.

Naked Yanks Ran for Lives, GI in Hospital Here Says

By the United Press

For Corpl. Joseph Christian, 24, of Piedmont, Ala., the Korean war lasted nine days. He and his buddies overrun, trapped, outmanned, outgunned—spent the last six hellish hours running for their lives.

"We were naked," Christian said. "We even threw away our boots, because you can run faster without clothes."

Christian was one of four battle casualties flown here Wednesday for treatment at Walter Reed Hospital. He had what he called "a bad case of the shakes." Even lighting a smoke was a task. The Army prescribed rest and fishing. Yesterday he left for home.

"We were on a hill some 15 miles north of Taejon," Christian recalled. "All of them must have had automatic weapons. They must have. There were too many bullets flying around. They couldn't help but hit some of us."

What happened next was an old story in Korea. Infiltration. Tanks. Men and more men. The position was held by Christian and his buddies was cut off. The tanks got behind them. Their artillery and mortars were silenced. The enemy kept rolling.

"Nine of us started out. Somehow we got through the ring of tanks around us."

They ran—ran like hell.

"Two or three times, maybe even four times, I flopped to the ground. I just gave up. I couldn't go any more. But I got up and went some more.

"Once we came up on two tanks. We thought they were friendly . . . Three guys got it . . . We ran"

Now down to six, they would run maybe 20 minutes, crawl 20 minutes, hide 20 minutes.

"We hid behind anything to get away from that small arms fire. Sometimes we even drove headfirst into rice paddies to get under it."

Some of their clothes were torn off in their dash.

"We threw the rest away," Christian said. He said it is surprising how much wind resistance you get from a shirt.

About dark they staggered into Taejon.

"Then I started shaking. They gave me some pills. The next thing I remember they're putting me on an airplane . . . .

"I want to go back to my outfit when I'm able. There probably won't be much left of my regiment . . . there can't be."

37 Wounded In Korea Now At Honolulu

Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, July 29 (U.P.).—A huge military air transport hospital plane carrying 63 wounded or sick soldiers, including 37 casualties of the Korean war, landed here today in the largest single aerial medical evacuation of the war.

The Boeing strato-freighter took off from Tokyo yesterday. Plane Commander Maj. Donald J. Ferguson of Detroit said more strato-freighters will be pressed into service because of increased medical airlift needs.

The huge plane will continue on to the mainland after patients rest and are treated at Tripler Army Hospital, MATS officials said. The men are en route to various United States hospitals.

A medical corpsman said the wounded and sick included 42 litter cases and 21 others who are able to walk.

While C-54s normally carry 28 patients, the C-97 freighters hold 70, besides cutting Tokyo-to-California flight time from five to three days.

The Army released the names of five of the wounded aboard, but withheld identification of others pending notification of kin. Those named were: Pfc. Cecil H. Blair, Pickeville, Ky.; 2d Lieut. Harold E. Craig, Kansas City, Kans.; Pfc. Charles R. Lewis, Winchester, Va.; Pfc. Robert E. Lakie, Syracuse, N. Y., and Pfc. Alton J. Falgout, jr., West Wego, La.

Air Attacks Stepped Up on Red Threat in South

Tokyo, Sunday, July 30 (AP).—United States force today appeared to be stepping up their air attacks against the Communist war machine in Korea.

B-29s from United States bases in Japan went out "in some strength" early today, striking supply and communications targets in North Korea, an Air Force spokesman said.

That was taken as an indication that Superforts were making bigger raids on supply lines of Communist troops in the south.

Yesterday more than 90 percent of the Air Force's fighter and bomber missions was directed against Reds advancing on the southwest flank of the United States positions.

Associated Press Correspondent Leif Erickson at Fifth Air Force Air Force Headquarters in the field said the concerted air drive indicated a growing concern which the Red advances pose in that area.

Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker, commander of the United States Eighth Army, told divisional commanders yesterday that he thought the threat from the south was more serious than that to the north and east, along the Hamchang-Andong-Yongdok front.

Anr Air Force spokesman said the increased fighter and bomber sorties were a reflection of his concern.

The Air Force flew more than 250 effective sorties yesterday. They claimed at least three Red tanks and 24 vehicles. Reports said five artillery pieces were destroyed and troop concentrations were strafed.

In a strike against Anul near Kochang, United States planes started fires that destroyed an estimated 1200 drums of fuel. Kochang is about 75 miles northwest of Pusan, big United States supply port on the east coast.

A spokesman at the Fifth Air Force headquarters said that up to noon yesterday 44 seriously wounded U. S. soldiers had been evacuated to Japan from a forward airstrip. He said the evacuation flights yesterday probably reached a record high.

The B-29s are blasting North Korean targets at a rate of 5000 tons of bombs per month, Maj.-Gen. Emmett (Rosie) O'Donnell disclosed today.

The bomber command chief said 3000 tons of bombs already had been dropped on both tactical and strategic targets starting with the first mission by two new B-29 groups July 13.

The initial assault was mounted eight days after the two groups first received orders to come overseas from their American West Coast bases.

Since then the B-29s have maintained a daily attack schedule without much regard for weather.

Philippines Send 17 Sherman Tanks To Yanks in Korea

Manila, (Sunday) July 30 (AP).—The Philippines have sent 17 Sherman tanks and a tank destroyer to American forces in Korea, it was disclosed yesterday by Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine foreign secretary and president of the United Nations General Assembly.

He told the Philippine Department of the American Legion the Republic is determined to give maximum assistance to the "common adventure" in Korea.

It was known two weeks ago that armor had been sent to American forces from here, but President Elpidio Quirino asked the news be withheld until the shipment reached Korea.

Romulo repeated his pledge that Filipinos "again will fight side by side" with United States troops.

GI Trainees Again To Face Live Bullets

By The Associated Press

To toughen its soldiers for battlefield conditions, the Army yesterday said it has intensified its training with realistic combat exercises — including use of live ammunition in machine guns.

In such courses, used in World War II but since banned, troops crawl under barbed wire while machine-gun fire streaks low over them.

The Army said its experience showed accidents were "not excessive" in such training. It added that the number of lives saved as a result of realistic training far outweighed the hazards. Safety officers supervise the courses.

Gen. Mark W. Clark, Chief of Army Field Forces, said it is imperative to prepare American soldiers psychologically to meet battlefield conditions.

"These battle courses have been reinstituted," he said, "because experience has shown that this type of training increases the ability of non-battle-tested troops to adapt themselves readily to actual battlefield conditions."

The Army said this training accustoms troops to the sound of artillery fire overhead and in close support of their action. The training also includes:

A city and village fighting course where troops learn the techniques of street fighting;

A close combat course where they are taught to use weapons such as bayonets at close quarters; and,

Preparation to meet guerilla and infiltration tactics which the North Korean Communists have used with great effectiveness.

U. S.-Trained Doctors Urged to Volunteer

By The Associated Press

The American Medical Association yesterday called on "physicians trained at governmental expense and otherwise deferred during World War II" to volunteer for immediate military duty.

Dr. Elmer L. Henderson, AMA president, said in a statement that the association "is determined that the men in the armed services will have adequate medical care even if legislation should prove necessary to ensure this."

Joint Chiefs of Staff Planning Army of 12 Divisions in 'Balanced' Permanent Forces

ment of the ultimate Air Force goal, it is possible to give with some certainty the general outlines of the plan.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.), of the House Armed Services Committee disclosed during a week of closed-door hearings on the expansion program that the services will grow from about 1,400,000 to about 2,100,000 by next June 30. The Air Force will expand from 48 to 58 groups and the Navy will add 48 major combat ships, plus auxiliaries, during the same period under the 10.5 billion dollar 1951 supplemental budget.

In addition, said Vinson, the Air Force will further enlarge to 69 groups by January 1, 1953. That air power goal, other authoritative sources made clear, is part of the new Joint Chiefs' program for the permanent size of the armed forces —as matters now stand.

2 More Divisions Planned

The program is a "balanced" one, with the Army and Navy also slated to expand further under the 1952 budget and reach the planned new higher level about the same time—the winter of 1952-53.

It is clear, therefore, that the Army, in addition to building existing divisions to full war strength or something near it and creating the important "corps troops" and service units needed for a true state of readiness—units that have been lacking under the skeletonized forces previously maintained —will build up to a permanent strength of 12 divisions. That is two more than at present.

In addition, the essential heavy artillery, engineers, antiaircraft, tank, and service forces needed for a strong reinforced corps in the "mobile reserve" to be maintained at home or in key spots must be created if the Army is to take care of emergencies such as Korea.

As for the Navy, its portion of a balanced force composed of a 69-group Air Force, a 12-division Army with ready corps troops, will be a fleet built around 12 or 13 big aircraft carriers and strengthened anti-submarine forces. That will mean two or three major flat-tops beyond the 10 now planned, plus another two squadrons of destroyers, a couple more cruisers, additional "killer" and other submarines and other antisubmarine forces.

It will also mean adding something like 200,000 personnel to the 2,100,000 now budgeted for this year.

Funds Increase Likely

Of the 10½ billion dollar supplemental defense budget now before Congress, about 4½ billions are to meet the immediate costs of the Korean fighting. The remaining six billions are for the permanent buildup. As some is "capital investment," Pentagon chiefs hope to keep the regular annual military outlay at or below this 19 billion cost—the regular 13.3 plus 6 billion supplemental appropriations asked this year.

Already there is word of probable extra funds this year for the armed forces. Another 600 million or more is understood to be in the mill for naval aircraft procurement to bring the Navy air funds about to the same proportion as the Air Force boost. All told, the ananual bill for fighting the big Cold War and little Hot War, including foreign aid, may run 35 billions or more.

Russian Design Seen

This mounting cost is the answer to why we are not going much further with our mobilization. Many Americans have wondered why more than a few units of the National Guard is not being called up. Others have remarked how different it would be if we had famed Task Force 38 back in operation in the Pacific—16 big flattops with a terrific wallop—or why we aren't building an Air Force on something the scale of 1944-45, as many advocate.

The dominant Administration thought—though there are dissenters—is that the Kremlin hopes to bleed us white by a 50 billion dollar a year or more military budget. This view is that the USSR does not plan a major war, but wants to occupy United States armed forces in a series of "Koreas" which will destroy our greatest asset—our free economy and industrial capacity.

We hope to avoid this—after Korea—by becoming considerably stronger in ready forces, building up other anti-Communist military power, and keeping out of such local wars if possible.

Even considering that this is a limited expansion, many Americans also much wonder why we are able only to provide what appears to be such small increases in military with the billions being spent.

As for past performances let it be said that of the 49 billions spent for the armed force in the postwar years, 67 percent went for salaries, food, clothing and transportation of military personnel and for current operations and maintenance of equipment (fuel oil, gas, repairs, etc.). Four and a half percent was spent for research and development, and 18 percent for new weapons, planes, ships, with the remaining devoted to such things as administration, construction of public works, industrial mobilization and retired pay.

Whether the administration and other funds were too lavish is a detailed question which cannot be decided here. The same is true of the nine billions spent for new weapons, ships, planes, etc. What we've bought since the war to date seems fairly good. What has failed in Korea were wartime weapons not up to improved enemy tanks.

Why Not Full Strength?

But there is another question. Why doesn't the new multi-billion-dollar expansion program build our forces even back up to the levels before the Johnson economy program, some Congressmen ask?

The Air Force had 58 groups a year or two ago. The Navy then had 13 big carriers in service. We did that with a 14 billion dollar budget. Why must we spend 23 billions and get something less? There are solid answers:

1. Our forces then were way under strength. For example, the Marine Corps in three years was reduced from 47.7 percent of war strength in its two divisions to 35.7 percent in 1950 and to 31.4 percent this spring for 1951 under the economy program.

"The Fleet Marine Force will find it most difficult," said Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, during recent public hearings, "at its reduced fiscal year 1951 strength to accomplish its initial wartime tasks, as set forth in present plans and still provide the necessary cadres for mobilization purposes."

2. Sherman also said Navy ships now are at only 67 percent of complement. As those in the Mediterranean and Far East are above this, their potential reinforcements at home are down close to half-strength, he made plain.

3. Most Army divisions, including at least some of those in Japan, have been at such reduced strength that regimental combat teams had only two infantry battalions.

Lack of a third battalion in reserve, of course, have made it difficult for regiments at the front to fight if for no other reason that all tactics taught at Army schools deal with two battalions in the line and one in reserve.

4. We have been lacking in support troops for our divisions—the vital engineers, ack-ack and tank battalions, etc., which support the divisions in combat.

Rocket-Fired Missile Streaks at 3600 MPH

Long Range Proving Ground, Cocoa, Fla., July 29 (AP).—A war rocket weighing 28,700 pounds at the takeoff thundered 9 miles high in 63 seconds today and fired a secondary missile which sped eastward at some 3600 miles an hour. The war rocket was a captured German V-2. The secondary missile was a scientific rocket called the "Wac Corporal" and was not designed for war use. It was the second test launching of guided missiles on horizontal courses.

. . . rocket in flight

The "Wac Corporal" rode up to the 9-mile height in the nose of the V-2. There it automatically separated as the V-2 attained its maximum speed of 2727 miles an hour. Details of the "Wac Corporal's" performance were secret, but it was officially stated that its speed was in excess of 5000 feet a second. That adds up to around 3600 miles an hour.

After discharging its smaller companion, the V-2 climbed to a maximum altitude of about 30 miles, which it reached in 85 seconds. Ten seconds later as it descended a button was pressed on the ground and the V-2 exploded. Its debris hit the ocean 50 miles offshore.

Gyroscopes in the rocket, set in advance to control the course, pulled the V-2 into a near horizontal position before it launched its secondary missile.

Both missiles transmit information back to the base by radio as they zip through the air at approximately twice the speed of a rifle bullet. They also are tracked visually and by radar. Twenty-seven kinds of information go into their performance record, including speed, altitude, heat generation and weather conditions, much of it radioed back by the missiles themselves.

Col. Harold R. Turner, safety officer who gave details of the test, said each missile performed perfectly.

The Gallup Poll

Public Favors Much Louder U.S. 'Voice'

By George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., July 29.—The move in Congress for a greatly expanded program to tell America's story abroad is getting increasing support from the public

Before the Korean war began, the vote in favor of the Benton proposal to step up our information program abroad stood at 5-to-4 in a survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion. Today it is 7-to-4 in favor.

Among those persons who already know something about the present activities of the Voice of America, the vote for a greatly enlarged effort is substantial—nearly 3-to-1.

The resolution sponsored by Senator William Benton (D., Conn.) proposes a network of long wave, medium wave and short wave radio stations capable of reaching every receiver in the world, as part of a vast increase in an American "propaganda of truth."

The reaction of the general public to an expanded information program was tested in a survey in April and again last week. Here is the trend:

"Some people believe the United States should spend a great deal more money than we are now spending to offset Russian propaganda (information) and to tell our side of the story to Europe and the world. Do you agree or disagree?"

	Today's	April Survey
In favor of more expenditure	47%	52%
Against	38	29
No opinion	15	19
	100%	100%

In order to record the views of the better informed voters—those aware that the State Department has been operating the "Voice of America" broadcasts to foreign lands—the survey asked each person, "Have you ever read or been told anything about the "Voice of America' broadcasts?"

Vote of Persons Aware of VOA Broadcasts

	Today's	April Survey
In favor of more expenditure	58%	64%
Against	35	24
No opinion	7	12

By contrast here is the vote of those who were not familiar with the broadcasts:

Vote of Persons Not Aware of VOA Broadcasts

Sheet Hoarders Relax After Alabaman's Idea

Anniston, Ala., July 29 (AP).—Juel Winfrey, manager of an Anniston store, said customers have been snapping up every sheet put on the counter.

He divided the sheets under two signs. One read "sheets for those who need them—$2 each. Limit four to a customer."

The othr sign read "Sheets for hoarders—$2.59 each. No limit."

Winfrey said nobody has bought more than two sheets at a time since the signs went up two days ago.

West Bloc in U. N, Meets to Make Certain Russia's Malik Can't Upset Its Action in Korea

Lake Success, July 29 (AP).—Russia kept the United Nations guessing tonight what she will do when Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob A. Malik takes over the Security Council presidency for August on Tuesday.

Malik has not told U. N. officials yet, as he promised, what the day's order of business will be. It was presumed he was conferring with his aides and getting new instructions from Moscow.

A Big Three group, meantime, met with Norway's Arne Sunde, Council president for July, on a broad program to insure that the Security Council will not be powerless if Malik tries obstructionist tactics over Korea or any other question.

Representatives of Britain, France and the United States were at the first meeting yesterday. Two more meetings were held today. Another will be held Sunday if necessary, and also on Monday.

Meeting Hit As Illegal

It is one of the Council meetings that the Soviet news agency Tass charged in Moscow today is being held by the "Anglo-American bloc, hurriedly and illegally" before Malik can return as chairman.

The meeting was intended to discuss a call for money and supplies to care for upwards of one million Korean war refugees.

This would be the last meeting that could change Security Council rules, before Malik comes back, if it is believed necessary to change rules to take care of the brewing situation.

A British spokesman said today Malik cannot oust the Chinese Nationalists from the Council merely by declaring Delegate T. F. Tsiang is there illegally.

Britain has recognized the Chinese Communist regime, but she will not support any tactic of that sort, the spokesman said. The Security Council president does not have the power to decide a membership question, he said.

The temper of other delegates also appeared to be that, despite recognition of Communist China by some, they would vote down a parliamentary maneuver to switch the representation.

A fair assumption is that Malik's opening tactics will be to declare that meetings which Russia boycotted since last January were illegal. If that comes to a ballot, he will be voted down.

If he proposes a peace offensive with an offer for mediation in Korean, he won't get very far.

If he suggests it on present battle lines, he will be reminded the Council has demanded the North Koreans roll back to the thirty-eighth parallel, where they started the invasion of South Korea.

If he proposes it on the bases of admitting the Communist Chinese as part of the bargain, he will be told from many quarters that there can be no such bargaining.

U. S. Veto in U. N. Urged

(In Washington, two members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee demanded the United States block any move to admit Chinese Communists to the United Nations, by use of the veto, if necessary.

Senator George (D. Ga.,) said that with American troops fighting in Korea he doesn't think this country can afford to withhold its Security Council veto if that is the only way to bar the Chinese Communists.

(Senator H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.) called on Secretary of State Acheson to make it clear that the U. S. will use every means at its command to keep the Chinese Reds out of the U. N.

(The State Department has taken the position it would be unwise at this time for the U. N. to consider admitting Mao, Tse-tung representatives, but it has said the U. S. would not exercise the veto if such a showdown came.)

Two More Arrested in Spy Case

ABRAHAM BROTHMAN

based on an arrangement among Brothman, Miss Moscowitz and Gold to give identical false information to the 1947 grand jury. He said they rehearsed their story so there would be no slip-ups before the jury.

Saypol said Miss Moscowitz was charged with thinking up the scheme. The indictment also mentioned a Thomas Kiernan, identified as Brothman's attorney and a reputable man, as unwittingly becoming the go-between who assured that the stories coincided.

The indictment charged Brothman and his secretary with "conspiracy to defraud the United States in the exercise of its governmental function of administering and enforcing the criminal laws."

Anyone convicted of trying to influence any party or witness in Federal Court proceedings may be fined $5000 or imprisoned five years or both.

The atomic spy ring whose discovery Brothman and his secretary may have delayed, was cracked last February with the arrest of Dr. Klaus Fuchs, top-flight British atomic scientist. The German-born scientist admitted he gave secrets to Russia and was sentenced to 14 years in prison.

Fuchs named Gold as his 'contact" man who funneled his priceless information to Soviet agents. Gold was arrested last May and confessed he had worked with a Soviet spy ring for 10 years. His revelations resulted in the arrest of Brothman and Miss Moscowitz, and three men charged with belonging to the atomic spy ring—Alfred Dean Slack, David Greenglass and Julius Rosenberg.

Hoover said Gold reported he met Brothman in 1942 in connection with Gold's espionage work.

The meeting was arranged by Semenov, the mysterious "John Doe" indicted with Gold on charges of slipping atomic secrets to Russia.

Hoover said Semenov at that time was head of "this particular Soviet espionage network."

Gold and Brothman later discussed information they were to obtain for Russia, Hoover said.

When they were summoned before the grand jury in 1947, Gold and Brothman both said they first met through the late Jacob Golos, another Soviet spy, instead of through Semenov.

Gold said Brothman urged him to tell this story to the grand jury so that their stories would be consistent.

When Gold left Brothman's employ in 1948, Brothman warned him to stick by the story, but the FBI said yesterday that Brothman was arrested through the efforts of Gold, who has confessed to his part in the spy ring and helped round up other members.

The FBI said Miss Moscowitz, who is single and lives in Manhattan, was Brotherman's secretary for a number of years, and later was a partner in his firm.

Brothman was born in New York City, August 15, 1913, and was graduated from Columbia University in 1933. He specialized in chemical engineering and accountancy.

Turn to the Women's Section and read "How To Get a Husband." Don't miss it in the daily Post, either.

Belgian Rioting Spreads

Belgium, a member of the western front of nations.

The Socialist Le Peuple said a states-general, or provisional parliament, would be called shortly in Liege, center of violently anti-Leopoldist Walloonia. This report heightened rumors that an insurrectional provisional government might be formed in the French-speaking south.

Scoialist trade union leaders boasted that 500,000 workers were on strike against their King; that not a single train could move in Charleroi, Mons, Namur and Liege; that only one coal mine in the entire country and not one steel mill was working.

Antwerp, the chief port, was paralyzed. Locks were working only under the protection of gendarmes. Several international trains were stalled with their passengers at Belgium's frontier.

A government official said measures being taken at Liege were about the same as under a state of siege.

Troops and gendarmes with fixed bayonets guarded bridges across the Meuse, virtually cutting the city in two.

Hostile groups formed near the bridges despite the ban on meetings and in some cases attempted to tear down posters proclaiming the ban.

Gendarmes closed all roads leading out of the city, and armored cars patrolled the city.

The governor of the province resigned, then withdrew his resignation.

A battalion of the regular army's crack Chasseurs Ardennais was ordered from occupation duties in Germany to Liege.

Another battalion of troops was reported ordered into Hainaut Province, with its strike-bound cities of Charleroi and Mons.

The second lancers and parachute units were standing by at the big military center of Beverloo for movement into strike centers. Defense officials said two more battalions would be recalled from Germany.

The anti-Leopoldist strike movement was gaining in Flanders, the northern part of the country most friendly to the King. Half of Ghent's workers struck. Oostende's gas and electric employes quit work.

In the capital, demonstrators reinforced by thousands of anti-Leopoldists who poured into the city from the south, fought two battles with gendarmes, the national police.

Meanwhile, roving bands attacked strikebreakers at many places in the city.

Virtually all Brussels factories were closed. Men working the locks between the docks and River Scheldt at Antwerp went on strike. A bridge linking two docks was blown up during the night, blocking the channel.

Brussels hotel employes were ordered to strike Monday. Tourists swamped travel offices seeking to get home.

The capital's power plants were on reduced schedule. There were no municipal services in more than half the city. Even the government's official gazette, in which a law must be printed to make it effective, was unable to publish.

Missouri Primary To Test Truman 'Pull'

By The Associated Press

President Truman's 1950 vote-pulling power will be tested in a Missouri Democratic primary this week. In other elections, the Governors of Kansas and Kentucky will be trying for United States Senate nominations.

These are the main bouts in six State primaries starting Tuesday and running through Saturday.

Missouri, Kansas, Virginia and West Virginia hold their primaries Tuesday. Tennessee votes Thursday and Kentucky Saturday.

In the President's home State of Missouri, the big race among the Democrats shapes up between State Senator Emery W. Allison, of Rolla, and former Representative Thomas C. Hennings, jr., of St. Louis, for the Senate nomination. It's rated a toss-up, even though Allison has Mr. Truman's support.

Senator Forrest C. Donnell, a stern critic of the Truman Administration, is regarded as an easy winner over three opponents for the Republican nomination.

Backed by Organization.

Allison, a lawyer completing his twelfth year in the State senate, has support not only from the President, but from Gov. Forrest Smith and the James M. Pendergast organization in Kansas City.

Hennings, also a lawyer, served three House terms in Washington. He has attacked what he calls "Pendergastism." His managers have been critical of the President's "intervention" in the primary.

Both Allison and Hennings have indorsed the President's Korean policy, advocated strict law enforcement, and denounced gangsterism.

All of the 12 Democratic representatives and the one Republican, Representative Dewey Short, are seeking renomination. Short and six Democrats—Magee, Welch, Carnahan, Jones, Cannon, and Karsten—have no opposition. No Republican has filed against Jones in the heavily Democratic Tenth District.

Party Controls At Stake

Tuesday's Kansas primaries feature struggles for control of the two major parties in the State.

Gov. Frank Carlson is seeking the Republican senatorial nomination against Harry W. Colmery, former national commander of the American Legion.

But the GOP control fight lies in the governsorship race. Governor Carlson's and Senator Harry Darby's forces are behind Edward F. Arn, former State attorney general.

Two others are in the race for the GOP governorship nomination, Frank L. Hagaman, lieutenant governor, and Mrs. Kathryn K. Hitchings, a Prohibitionist. Neither is regarded as a serious contender.

Rivals for the Democratic Senate nomination in Kansas are Paul Aiken, former Assistant Postmaster General, and Carl Rice, national committeeman. They, too, are fighting for State party control.

Four of the six Republican House incumbents are being opposed in Kansas.

In Kentucky Saturday, Gov. Earle Clements is bidding for the Democratic Senate nomination, with party organization backing, in a contest with Glenn Hatcher, Secretary of State. Both seek the full six-year term and the two months remaining of the term of Alben Barkley, who resigned his Senate seat when he became Vice President.

For the GOP Senate nomination, Charles I. Dawson, former State Attorney General, has party organization support.

His chief opponent for both long and short terms is Charles E. Whittle, attorney. James William Brown, another attorney, is after the six-year nomination, too, while Finley Thomas seeks the two-months spot.

In the House primaries in Kentucky, three Democratic incumbents are as good as reelected. They are Representatives Gregory, Chelf and Underwood.

Nominations for the House will be voted in West Virginia Tuesday.

Holt Switches Parties

Rush D. Holt, former Democratic Senator, has provided a fillip to what otherwise would have been a very dull off-year election in West Virginia. He has switched his party allegiance and is trying for the Republican House nomination in the Third District. He will face Rufus C. Hurt, second runner in the 1946 primary, and two others.

Republicans also have contests in the other five West Virginia districts. But the Democrats, who now hold all six House seats, have only two, Representative Bailey in the Third and Ramsay in the First.

All 10 Tennessee Representatives—two Republicans and eight Democrats—have primary opposition.

In the traditionally Republican First District, former GOP National Chairman Carroll Reece is trying to unseat Rep. Dayton E. Phillips.

In the Second District Rep. John Jennings, jr., of Knoxville, is challenged by Howard Baker, Oneida attorney.

Most of the Democratic incumbents are favored to be returned to Congress from Tennessee.

Democratic Gov. Gordon Browning is seeking renomination against three opponents, including State Senator Clifford Allen of Nashville.

Later in the month, candidates will be chosen in Connecticut, Idaho, Nebraska, Wyoming, Mississippi and New York. Only in Idaho, however, will Senate choices be made.

2 Caught Minutes After $10,461 W. Va. Holdup

Huntington, W. Va., July 29 (AP).—Two masked bandits robbed the First National Bank in nearby Kenova of an estimated $10,461 at 11:40 a. m. (EST) today, but the loot was swiftly recovered.

Within 15 minutes police had arrested two men in a station wagon near the Huntington city limits. Authorities said the money was recovered.

Sergt. E. Ray Blake identified the men as Edgar Allen Moore, 24, of Ashland, Ky., a Marshall College student, and Peter John Mayer, 26, a Huntington socialite formerly from Detroit. He said they had two pistols but did not resist police.

The bank was filled with patrons when two men entered from a station wagon parked in front and announced the holdup. Customers were forced to lie on the floor.

Police Mystified By Double Deal In Dog Licenses

Dayton, Ohio, July 29 (AP).—Several weeks ago Charles Freckman reported the collar of his mixed-breed dog had been stolen. The dog was left behind.

Last week, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Clover of near Dayton were vacationing in Michigan. They reported their English spaniel stolen.

Reed City, Mich., police today notified local authorities they had found the Clover's dog. He was wearing his own Dayton license No. 357. But he also was wearing license tag No. 667, the one Freckman reported stolen.

Why? The police wish they knew.

Virginians Go to Polls Tuesday in 8th District Primaries

Democrats and Republicans in nearby Virginia go to the polls Tuesday in party primaries to pick nominees for the Eighth District Congressional seat.

The Democratic incumbent—dean of Virginia Congressmen—is Howard W. Smith. He has held the seat for 20 years and is seeking his eleventh term.

Opposing him as the party's nominee in the November general election is Arthur F. Souther, 32-year-old Arlington lawyer. A third Democratic contestant, H. Keaney Kopp, withdrew last Friday, although his name had already been printed on the ballot.

Entered in the Republican primary are Tyrrell Krum, who won the 1948 GOP nomination, then lost to Smith in the election, and Hal Flood Hughes, Arlington real estate man.

Covers 15 Counties

The Eighth District covers the counties of Arlington, Fairfax, Loudoun, Prince William, Fauquier, Stafford, Culpeper, Orange, Madison, Louisa, King George, Goochland, Albemarle, Greene and Fluvanna and the cities of Alexandria and Charlottesville.

Elsewhere in Virginia there are contested Democratic primaries only in the First and Third Districts.

In the First, the candidates are Edward J. Robeson, of Newport News, winner in the May 2 special election for the unexpired term of the late S. Otis Bland, and Mrs. Katherine Blow, of Yorktown. The district covers the tidewater region from Newport News and the Eastern Shore over to Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County.

One of the closest Virginia contests is expected in the Third District, centering on Richmond. There Representative J. Vaughan Gary is challenged for a second time by Minetree Folkes, jr., a Richmond lawyer.

Besides the Eighth District race, the only other polling in the Virginia area near Washington on Tuesday will be in Arlington—a referendum on an authorization of a $500,000 swimming pool bond issue.

The name of Fred W. Bach, unopposed Democratic candidate for a seat on the Arlington County Board this November, will also appear on the Democratic ballot in the county, No. Republican candidate filed for the office. Bach will try for the seat of nonpartisan incumbent Daniel A. Dugan.

Quiet Eelection Season

Eighth District Republicans Krum and Hughes have done the only actual campaigning in a quiet election season in northern Virginia.

Democratic electioneering was almost nil.

Krum, 50, chairman of the Fairfax Republican Committee, lives near Vienna, Va.

A veteran of both World Wars, he is a former Times-Herald Veterans Affairs editor.

In 1948 Krum won the primary, but couldn't defeat Representative Smith, who beat him by a vote of about 32,000 to 25,000.

Hughes, 50, lives at 1411 N. Vernon st., Arlington, and is now working for the real estate firm of Talmage Wilcher in the county. This is his first try at public office.

A native Virginian, and Arlington resident since 1934, he is a past vice president of the Republican Club of Arlington, and a past treasurer of the Arlington GOP committee.

Representative Smith, 67, lives at 204 W. Walnut st., Alexandria. A native of Broad Run, Va., he received his law degree from the University of Virginia in 1903 and began practicing law in Alexandria shortly afterwards.

In 1922 he was made judge of the Alexandria Corporation Court, following a four-year service as Commonwealth's attorney of the city. Six years later, he received the Sixteenth Circuit Court judgeship, but stepped down from the post in 1930 to run for Congress.

Souther is a Richmond native who has lived in Arlington 12 years. His address is 632 S. 19th st., Arlington.

7341 Permits

New Building Hits Postwar Peak Here

More new building was started in Washington during the year ended June 30 than in any other year since the war. Its estimated dollar value of $82,323,000 was the highest for any year in the city's history.

These facts were contained in the annual report of the District's Central Permit Bureau, released yesterday, which also showed:

Permits were issued for 7341 dwelling units—2052 houses and 5289 apartments.

2. The amount of new building started in Northeast and Northwest Washington was double that of the previous year. In Southeast it was about the same. Southwest showed a decrease.

3. Almost all the new construction was of brick. Excluding private garages, 2457 permits were issued for brick structures, only five for frame buildings.

The bureau issued 89,000 permits last year, the report stated, and 62 percent were issued within 24 hours of application.

In submitting the report to the Board of Commissioners, Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young said these figures showed the two-year-old central bureau has "eliminated a mass of delay and red tape."

But he also pointed out that the speedy action occurred chiefly where permits were sought for "small simple jobs." For a big builder it's still a long wait before his permits come through, Young said. He suggested that funds for additional personnel be sought in the 1952 District budget. The cost could be made up by increasing permit fees as was done when the bureau was created, he said.

Metropolitan Washington was the second fastest growing area in the Nation in the past decade and now ranks eleventh in the United States, Census Bureau figures revealed yesterday.

The Washington area grew from 967,985 to 1,452,349 in the 10-year period, a jump of 33.35 percent. This was topped only by the San Francisco area with 33.96 percent and was closely followed by metropolitan Los Angeles with 32.66 percent.

Ten years ago Washington ranked twelfth among metropolitan areas.

Among cities proper, Washington is now ninth. But Boston, San Francisco and Pittsburgh all have bigger suburban areas while Baltimore's suburbs are smaller. Hence the difference in ranking.

The Nation's 12 largest metropoltan areas now contain some 41,978,000 people compared to about 35,447,000 a decade ago. This means that 27.9 percent of the country's population lives within these 12 areas in 1950 compared to just 1 percent less in 1940—26.9 percent.

The 1940 metropolitan area figures are something new this year. This is because the Census Bureau this year decided on a new definition of such an area, based on county lines around each central city. For Washington this means the area includes the District plus Prince Georges and Montgomery counties in Maryland and Alexandria, Fairfax counties in Virginia.

For purposes of comparison, however, the Census Bureau went back to the 1940 census tables and computed the population for that year in each area.

Another method of computing "urban" area population of the country, as distinct from "rural," is still in the works. Ten years ago "urban" meant the central city plus incorporated places of 2500 or more. But this left out such unincorporated places as Silver Spring and Bethesda, Md.

Now the "urban" meaning will be the central city plus all surrounding incorporated places, regardless of size, and all the closely settled unincorporated area which forms a continuous development.

How Metropolitan Areas Rank

The Census Bureau yesterday listed the Nation's metropolitan areas in order of size according to the 1950 preliminary population counts. Ranking of cities is shown in parenthesis:

New Liquid Kills Roaches and Ants

New Way to Kill Pests Discovered by Scientists

ROACHES are the most difficult household pests to control, and they can be brought into any home from the market in a bag of potatoes or other groceries.

Science has just come forth with a new discovery that kills cockroaches and ants, and that stays effective for months. It is called Johnston's NO-ROACH coating.

It's just as simple and easy to use as it looks. You paint the coating on surfaces frequented by roaches and ants, woodwork near the sink, baseboards, garbage pails, window and door sills. When these crawling pests come in contact with this invisible, odorless, stainless coating they slowly become paralyzed, turn over on their backs with legs waving in the air, and die. Then the coating stays effective for months to kill any strays that get into the home and that walk over it.

Science has seen to it too, that this product contains no DDT, no sodium fluoride, and no phosphorous. Johnston's NO-ROACH is not a contaminating spray, or a messy powder. It is colorless, and may be brushed just where you want it, without having to move all your dishes and pots and pans.

Prices are 8 oz. for 89c, pint for $1.69.

Publisher and Carrier Confer . .

Rent

PART COMPANY—Carrier Bruce Thomas and Philip L. Graham, publisher of The Washington Post, talk about Bruce's future in the newspaper business. The youngster must give up his Post route because his father, Eugene Thomas, general manager of Television Station WOIC, is moving to New York

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

A battle of wits between a 9-year-old carrier and the publisher of The Washington Post was fought without quarter yesterday in the latter's office.

Meeting head-on in the fray were Bruce Thomas, carrier, and Philip L. Graham, publisher.

It all began when General Manager Eugene S. Thomas of Television Station WOIC came home recently and announced to his son that the station had been sold and the family was moving to New York, where Thomas will manage WOR-TV.

Taciturn

Bruce's reply must be added to that classic list typified by MacArthur's "I will return" and Coolidge's "I do not choose to run."

Looking his father straight in the eye, he said: "I do not approve."

Bruce later related the scene to a reporter:

"I told him I didn't approve because I didn't want to leave my job and didn't want to lose my friends. It is my first job."

Bruce lives with his father and mother at 6503 Maple ave. in Chevy Chase, Md., and delivers 38 Posts in that area. Every morning at 6 he may be seen tuging his wagon behind him.

Having informed his father of his position, Bruce next decided to protest the whole business to a man who occupied two important positions in relation to himself:

His own employer on his first job.

The purchaser of the television station, therefore the man responsible for his moving to New York and losing that job.

Enter Graham.

This, of course, would be Graham.

At 10:34 a. m. yesterday Bruce was ushered into Graham's office. He is tow-headed, blue eyes, pink-cheeked, wore levis, a T-shirt emblazoned definitely with "The Washington Post." He also wore a bold air.

He set himself into a chair, his feet dangling some distance from the floor.

The publisher of The Post, realizing at once he was up against no rubber stamp, took a cautious course.

"I think," said Graham, "your father betrayed you by selling his TV business and throwing you out of business as a carrier."

This effort to pass the buck was a mistake. Actually Bruce's father had nothing to do with the sale, as Bruce knew and as Graham, by the carrier's steady expression, now saw he knew.

Tries Appeasement

Quickly the publisher shifted to a course of appeasement.

"I will be happy," offered he, "to give you a letter to Mr. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of the New York Times, recommending you for a carrier job in New York."

Bruce dangled his legs over his chair and indicated he would think these terms over. He and Graham discussed various problems of the newspaper business and then Bruce came down to inspect the city room and submit himself to the usual interview.

"What do you like about your job?"

"Oh, I don't know. I kinda like to fold the papers and throw them on the porch. That's fun."

"What time do you get up?"

"I try to be out by 6 each morning. This morning it was 20 after. That's pretty unusual."

132 Home Accidents Here Reported During the Week

A 3½-year-old boy performed a partial tonsilectomy on himself and a 67-year-old woman was attacked by a rooster in two of last week's 132 home accidents.

The boy fell while carrying a screw driver and the rooster lacerated the woman's ankle with his spurs, the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service reported.

In other unusual accidents, a 22-year-old man ran a crochet hook through his hand, an 8-year-old boy was shot in the eye with a BB-gun and a young boy cut his palate severely when he fell with a curtain rod in his hand.

Five home fatalities were reported by the service, four from fall injuries, and one—a 16-month-old baby—from drinking kerosene.

Home injuries for 1950 stood at 3697—63 less than the 1949 number for the same period. Fatalities for 1950 stood at 110—28 less than 1949.

Get Death Sentence

Frankfurt, Germany, July 29 (U.P.).—A Warsaw military court today sentenced to death a former Royal Air Force pilot, accused of operating a British espionage organization in Poland, the Polish news agency PAP said tonight.

The agency report said Wladislav Sliwinski, a Pole, made a "full confession." He was charged with delivering 45 espionage reports to the British Embassy and of having relations with the American and French Embassies in Warsaw.

Prompt A-Burn Study Needed, U. S. Warned

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

The Nation must train—immediately—a minute-man army to cope with the problem of atom bomb-caused burns. The alternative in the event of an American Hiroshima would be "complete chaos and panic, with the inexcusable loss of many lives."

This was the warning yesterday from Dr. Everett Idris Evans, chairman of the subcommittee on burns of the National Research Council's Committee on Atomic Casualties. It came in an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The "plain truth," said the Richmond, Va., physician, is that "so few physicians and fewer lay persons are trained in even the simplest methods of burn care.

Training Needed at Once

"One can only conclude that unless proper burn care training of large numbers of physicians and/or the public is instituted at once, the handling of burn casualties after bomb attack on any of our cities must necessarily end in complete chaos and panic. . . . "

Professor of surgery and director of the Surgical Research Laboratories at the Medical College of Virginia, Dr. Evans asserted that the "widespread fear" of the physical effects of radiation has largely obscured the question of burns.

But, he continued, the recognition of the "potentialities" of A-burns is necessary to consider "in proper proportion how much of the total national effort should be applied to this aspect. . . . "

Dr. Evans said that based on Hiroshima experience—he is surgical consultant to the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission, Far East Command—several thousand burn casualties can be expected.

Three Burn 'Zones'

He outlined three burn "zones" and their problems:

An "outer zone" of 2500 to 4000 yards from the center of the explosion: Here, "the burns may involve mainly the exposed surfaces of hands and face . . . . Treatment . . . can properly be delegated to trained lay persons."

An "intermediate zone" of 1500 to 2500 yards from center: Here, the injuries will be more extensive and will be accompanied by shock. "Physicians trained in the therapy of shock and the application of a simple but closed dressing"—as distinguished from treatment in which the injury is not covered—"will be needed in large numbers."

The "hypocenter" zone of zero to 1500 yards is where "havoc will prevail", and where "fewer surviving persons will be encountered."

Boldly Realistic

"Planning for the care of the survivors of this zone," the surgeon said, "must be boldly, even harshly, realistic lest medical efforts completely lose their effectiveness."

In the emergency treatment of A-burn victims, the article pointed out, there are at least five "highly important" points—relief of pain, emergency dressing, treatment and prevention of shock, sufficient intake of liquids, and prevention of infection.

"It may be pointless to refer here to the numbers of trained physicians, nurses and first aid workers necessary to solve this problem," Dr. Evans wrote, "Only free men with strong hearts and wills can accomplish the gigantic task. . . ."

Electronics To Be Used In Linguistics

They're going to teach languages with electronics at Georgetown University.

An electronic language laboratory is now being equipped in Poulton Hall on the University campus to help students learn languages much more effectively.

The new teaching technique combines the use of tape recording instruments and IBM multilingual selector equipment, used widely for simultaneous interpretation.

The technique, Georgetown officials said, was developed by Prof. Leon Dostert, director of Georgetown's language institute, and by engineers of the International Business Machines Corporation.

The electronic equipment has been under experimentation for a year in the Institute of Language and Linguistics, and the new laboratory will be ready by September for the language programs of the School of Foreign Service and the College of Arts and Sciences.

The laboratory will seat 125 students at a time. It is so set up that astudent, sitting with headphones in a semisoundproof booth, may select his lesson for repetitive drill work in any one of six languages. Laboratory work will be correlated with class instruction.

Rare Element Germanium Found in D. C. Area

Next time you're doing a little digging hereabouts, watch for chromium, germanium, vanadium, copper and zinc.

All are to be found in Greater Washington, and the United States Geological Survey has found them. The geologists are embarked on a large project, of which the Washington surveys are but a part, to find the "minor elements" present in small deposits in the United States.

Discovery of germanium in and near Washington has been most exciting, according to Taisia Stadnichenko, one of three United States Geological Survey employes assigned to the work.

Miss Stadnichenko said germanium has been found at the Banneker playground, at the Northwest Anacostia Branch, near Queens Chapel, and along Good Hope rd. and Nichols ave. A large deposit was found during excavation for the new University of Maryland stadium at College Park, Miss Stadnichenko said.

Germanium, one of the newer minor elements, was discovered in Germany in 1886. The United States bed of this mineral, which apparently extends from Baltimore to Richmond, is the second largest to be found. Large deposits are in southwest Africa and the Belgian Congo.

Germanium has been especially useful in electronics and was invaluable in World War II in detecting ultra high frequency radio and radar signals. It also has been used in treatment of secondary anemia.

The elements in Greater Washington are recoverable, if it is feasible to mine them. However, Miss Stadnichenko pointed out, mining operations in thickly populated areas are something of a problem. She said she knew of one firm which is interested, if plans can be worked out.

Other scientists exploring Washington's rarer elements include J. M. Axelrod and K. J. Murata.

agencies to be placed on longer work weeks.

The Army had its military personnel here on a 8:30 a. m. to 3 p. m. Saturday workday for the first time yesterday, making a 46-hour week for them. Many of the officers said they were handicapped because they lacked stenographers, typists, and civilians generally to carry out their decisions and policies. They were told: "The matter is being studied."

Meantime, thousands of Navy civilians on the West Coast are working overtime to get out supplies, load ships, etc. The Army and Air Force has approved overtime, too, for a number of its civilians in production work.

It may be denied, but some of the war agency officials have been trying to figure out some way of working white-collar civilians overtime without paying them for it. It can't be done legally. Some offices have a flat policy of granting compensatory time for overtime worked—a policy that must be discarded.

The law is very clear in that it gives the employe the option of taking either compensatory time off or overtime pay for overtime worked. The agency has no choice in the matter under the law.

Quick Action Seen on Two District Bills

House Is Expected To Expedite Defense And Police Measures

The House may give fast treatment this week to two bills to create a civil defense program for the District and to place Washington police on a five-day week, thus sending the measures to the White House.

Both bills, among the few important local ones awaiting final congressional action, have cleared both houses and presumably are headed for conference.

But yesterday William N. McLeod jr., House District Committee clerk, said Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.), may ask the House to accept the Senate amendments, a move which would send both bills directly to the President for signature.

The Senate, at request of Minority Leader Kenneth Wherry (Nebr.), tacked amendments to the civil defense measure which would require FBI loyalty checks on all personnel employed by the civil defense office. Others would apply civil service regulations to the defense set-up and require annual reports to Congress on the preparedness program.

On the policemen's short week measure, the Senate stipulated it would not go into effect until the necessary funds are appropriated. The House version would have started the short week on July 1.

Funds to pay for the police bill are awaiting House Appropriations Committee action, as is the civil defense money request.

Other bills which McMillan may also call up for final approval would permit retired policemen to serve on the District Boxing Commission, provide area-wide mutual protection for firemen, and create an office for purchase of surplus property for District educational institutions.

Meanwhile, a House District Subcommittee headed by Thomas G. Abernethy (D., Miss.), agreed to delay further consideration of the bill to open the Washington milk market to outsiders until August 8, when its author, Representative A. L. Miller (R., Nebr.), is expected to return to the Capitol.

Hearing Set On Arlington Pinball Law

The Arlington County Board yesterday set September 9 for a hearing on a proposed ordinance which would practically ban pinball, shuffleboard and other coin-operated games of skill in the county.

The ordinance would forbid the machines in drug stores, bowling alleys, movie theaters, places where beer or wine is served, or within 500 yards of schools or churches.

It would require a merchant wishing to put machines in his store to get approval from the electrical inspector, and also a certification of good character from the Chief of Police.

Besides the ordinance, the Board has also been requested by Arlington Commonwealth's attorney Denman T. Rucker, to put a $200 to $300 tax on each machine, and to require distributors to take out a $1500 license.

In other actions yesterday the board:

1. Voted to hold all its hitherto closed conferences in public, in the future, in the Arlington Circuit Court Room. Next conference will follow a special meeting Thursday night.

2. Voted unanimously to set up an advisory committee on county government and administrative procedure, on a resolution by Robert W. Cox. The committee will be asked to make a "comprehensive study" of county government organization, and to offer advice on any problems submitted to it by the board or county manager.

3. Deferred until Thursday night action on pending bids for the county's street surfacing program.

4. Took under advisement, for possible discussion Thursday, a further report by the County Manager on self-service gas stations, which the board has already banned in Arlington. The report stated: "From information we have, it is obvious that self-service gasoline stations can be made a safely operated business through complete regulation measures."

Dogs Delay Police on Raid At D. C. House

District police yesterday charged a Washington woman with two gaming violations and one liquor violation and ruefully wondered how many more arrests they might have made had it not been for some dogs.

The arrested woman is Mrs. Verna Young, 39, whose address was given as 2317 Virginia ave. nw. She was charged with setting up a gaming table, permitting gaming and with keeping and selling beer and whisky without a license.

Mrs. Young was arrested shortly before 1 a. m. yesterday at her home by vice squad men with a search warrant. An undercover man had bought whisky in the house and got into a dice game there for evidence.

Lieut. Roy Blick said five men were on the raid. As they went in the front door, "six or seven men" went hurriedly out the back door.

The pursuing vice squad men were halted by a number of dogs in the rear yard of the house. The dogs were friendly to the escaping "customers" but had a decided antipathy to police. All "six or seven" escaped.

Mrs. Young was out on $2000 bond yesterday after appearances before Municipal Court Judge Armand W. Scott and U. S. Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence. She will be heard Monday in Municipal Court and on August 16 by Commissioner Lawrence.

Arrested Again

Bet Suspect Now Charged With Threats

A 49-year-old man, charged Friday on two gambling counts, was rearrested yesterday on a charge of obstructing justice and warned to stop threatening the man responsible for his first arrest.

He is George Beal of 724 31st st. se., who with John A. Tolson, 54, of 2918 M pl. se., and Herbert W. Schneider, jr., 31, of 416 Newcomb st. se., was arrested Friday on charges of setting up a gaming table and permitting gaming. Vice squad men made the arrest after complaints by John Ionesco, 56, of 1016 10th st. nw., that the three men had reneged on a horse bet.

The three men later were freed on bond for a court appearance next month.

Yesterday, Ionesco reappeared before Lieut. Roy Blick of the vice squad, saying he was threatened by Beal and Frederick Murdock, 27, of 1336 Missouri ave. nw., who was not involved in the earlier arrests.

Ionesco said Beal and Murdock came to his newsstand at 9th st. and New York ave. nw., Friday and threatened to beat him up for appearing against Beal. Before they left, they warned him to "think it over." Ionesco said neither man touched him during the conversation.

At noon yesterday, the two men were picked up in front of the poolroom at 937 9th st. nw., where the earlier gaming arrests were made. Arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence, the men were freed on $2500 bond for a hearing August 16. They were warned that if there were any more threats, bond would be raised to $25,000.

Maryland's Sewer Law Held Illegal

A law requiring the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission to install home water and sewer connections has been declared unconstitutional. The law was passed in the 30-day session of the Maryland General Assembly in January.

Prince Georges County Circuit Court Judge Charles C. Marbury ruled Friday that the law did not deal with any of the three topics, to which short session legislation is limited by the State constitution.

The law did not deal with State finances, he ruled; it did not deal with an acute emergency, and it was not in the general public welfare.

As a result of the decision, water and sewer connections in the Montgometry and Prince Georges County areas embraced by the commission again may be made by registered plumbers.

Judge Marbury's decision came after five master plumbers had asked the court to declare the law unconstitutional. The plumbers were represented by Louis Lebowitz.

The plumbers have contended that the commission "squandered almost one million dollars" in taxpayers' money on sewer work. Such installation, when it was in the hands of the plumbers, cost less money, they said.

Commission Attorney T. Howard Duckett admitted that no emergency existed when the law was passed, but contended that the matter was in the general public welfare. He also contended that the Legislature alone has the right to determine what laws they can pass at a 30-day session.

Judge Marbury held that courts may pass on the constitutionality of bills enacted at a short session.

The judge also ruled that the general public welfare means "legislation affecting the State as a whole or a considerable segment thereof in contrast to legislation affecting a particular county or portions of two counties."

Optimist Club Party

The National Capital Optimist Club will hold a stag party at the Italian Pleasure Club near Four Corners, Md., at noon Wednesday.

15,850 Vehicles Use Dupont Underpass Daily During June

Traffic counts made in June showed a daily average of 15,850 vehicles used the Connecticut ave. underpass beneath Dupont Circle.

During the same period, 11,000 vehicles used the circle surface on Massachusetts ave. — which had been suggested by some as the logical line of the underpass.

Results of the survey, released yesterday by District Highway Director J. N. Robertson, also showed the average number of cars traveling around or under the circle each day was about 51,000.

Robertson also announced that the Commissioners have authorized restoring former rush hour parking spaces on Connecticut and Massachusetts aves. near the circle. Peak hour parking had been forbidden there since the circle reopened while highway officials studied its possible effect on the movement of circle traffic, Robertson said.

'I Did It', Iraqui Says At Inquest Into Slaying

Embassy Aide Held For Grand Jury; Janitor Stabbed to Death in Basement

Chamchum Elias Sesi, 30-year-old Iraq Embassy employe, was held for grand jury action yesterday in the knife murder of the embassy's head janitor. Sesi told the District coroner:

"I did this thing, I did it!"

Sesi was arrested in Detroit Thursday, six hours after Mahmud Rodaini, 38, was found knifed to death in his basement room at the Iraq chancery, 2205 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Sesi appeared composed and even cheerful as he went before a coroner's jury yesterday. The stocky, dark defendant nodded vigorously when the coroner, Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, told him he could question the witnesses at the inquest, but was not to make any statements.

But when Dr. MacDonald asked him if he wanted to question the first witness, Dr. Allen E. Marans of Gallinger Hospital, Sesi said, "No, sir," and made his statement that he "did this thing."

Homicide Squad Sergt. Bernard B. Crooke testified that in a written confession made in Detroit by Sesi, the embassy attendant declared Rodaini had been making indecent advances toward him for some time.

Sesi told Rodaini "a million times" to "stop this foolishness," according to the statement. When Rodaini made advances Wednesday night, he stabbed him with a knife a number of times and left the Embassy, taking a plane to Detroit, according to Sergt. Crooke's testimony outlining the confession.

Sesi, who did not have a lawyer, made no statement at the end of the testimony. He showed no emotion at the verdict of the coroner's jury holding him responsible for Rodaini's death and turning him over to the grand jury.

Railman Slain, Poker-Playing Rival Held

A 39-year-old Alexandria brakeman was punched to death yesterday and a brawny poker playing opponent was charged with the slaying last night by Alexandria police.

Mr. Oliver

Police identified the victim as John W. Oliver, 39, of 1614 Suter st., a brakeman for the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad.

The man who police said beat Oliver so brutally as to cause a fatal hemorrhage in his skull was identified as Reginald Kenneth Huff, 30, whose address was given as 2301 Cathedral ave. nw.

All-Day Poker Game

Inspector Russell A. Hawes, chief of Alexandria detectives, said Oliver, Huff, a 6-footer weighing 200 lbs., and four other men were engaged in an all-day poker game at the home of Walter Edwards, 35, one of the players, at 327 Hume ave., Alexandria.

All except Huff were railroad employes. Friday was pay-day for R. F. and P.

At about 3 p. m., Edwards told police, one draw poker hand had narrowed down to Oliver and Huff.

At this point, Oliver accused his opponent of marking the cards with his fingernails. Huff denied it. When Oliver called him a liar, Edwards said, Huff swung into action. Edwards called police and an ambulance.

Pronounced Dead

When police arrived Huff had fled and Oliver was lying unconscious in the living room. He was pronounced dead at Alexandria Hospital.

Repeated blows had caused hemorrhage, according to police.

None of the other poker players were under suspicion, Hawes said.

Relatives of the dead man said he had left home for work at 5 p. m. Friday and had not returned. He was the father of John W. Oliver, jr., a basketball and football star of George Washington High School of Alexandria.

Byrd Rides Again; Police Recover His 'Lost' Auto

Senator Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.), who lost his car on Friday, got it back yesterday.

Senator Byrd reported the loss when he left the Senate Office Building Friday at 5 p. m.

Detective Sergts. John G. Williams and Sigurd Ostenso, of the police auto squad, found the car yesterday abandoned and out of gas in the 700 block of 9th st. nw.

Alert, Glowing Mrs. Cleaveland Looks Back on a Full Century

The Washington Post

AT CENTURY MARK—Mrs. Abbie Cleaveland yesterday celebrated her 100th birthday at her home 614 Flower ave., Takoma Park, Md. Bedecked with orchids she awaited the arrival of guests for her party. At the cake-cutting she entertained with recitations from Robert Frost, her favorite poet

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Mrs. Abbie Cleaveland celebrated her one-hundredth birthday yesterday by reciting from memory Robert Frost's "Blueberries" at a party in her honor. . . .

You ought to have seen what I saw on my way
To the village through Patterson's pasture today . . .

How clear came the voice of this century-old woman! It must have been worth that trip from Minnesota and from New York—whence some of the relatives came for the party at 614 Flower ave., Takoma Park, Md.—just to hear her recite.

She looked like the original inspiration for the phrase "little old lady" where she sat in her green dress, strand of pearls and brooch, holding an old-fashioned bouquet of white carnations with three red rosebuds.

Phenomenally Alert

"Somebody say something — don't be so serious!" she said, as they all waited for the photographer to snap her picture.

That was Mrs. Cleaveland. A pleasure to meet her.

It is customary in stories of 100-year-old persons to speak of their alertness. But Mrs. Cleaveland's almost trigger-quick comprehension of questions is phenomenal.

This is partly a physical thing. Her hearing seems to be very good. She says she has "excellent appetite and good digestion."

Her state-of-being she also attributes to the fact she has always been "so interested in everything—in almost anything."

This extends from music, in which she was graduated at a Boston school, to the news from Korea.

Thus, her flexibility: In music her favorites are such as Beethoven and Bach. But she likes Gershwin, Cole Porter, too.

The party was at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Elon Salisbury, where she lives, and her memory fled back through an amount of time few ever know . . .

Remembers Lincoln's Death

She remembered how at her home in Lawrence, Mass., during the Civil War her aunt was president of "the Sanitary Commission —the Red Cross of those days, sending bags—kits they're called now—to the soldiers." and Abbie was president of the children's division of the Sanitary Commission.

And Lincoln. "I was in the yard at the time, I remember, and I heard someone coming out of the house, saying, 'The President has been assassinated.'"

The memories were good to hear, but nothing was quite like that recitation of poetry.

She went to school with Robert Frost's father and knows the son, whom she considers the world's greatest poet. Through the years she has memorized much of his poetry, and the words came yesterday so clear, nearly bell-like, into the hushed room from the 100-year-old lips.

. . . through Patterson's pasture
today
Blueberries as big as the end of your thumb,
Real sky-blue and heavy and ready to drum
In the cavernous pail of the first one to come!
And all ripe together, not some of them green
And some of them ripe! You ought to have seen!"

District Crime Probers to Meet This Week to Perfect Proposals

The House District Crime Subcommittee will begin "intensive" work this week on perfecting legislative proposals aimed primarily at stiffer penalties and a crackdown on habitual offenders here, Chairman James G. Davis (D., Ga.) said last night.

Committee meetings, he said, will begin probably Tuesday behind closed doors.

Whether the crime investigating group—fortified with a new $20,000 grant to continue its work—will conduct further public hearings depends entirely on how long Congress stays in session, Davis indicated.

The resolution which authorized the probe of local crime and law enforcement stipulates the committee must wind up its work and submit a report to the House before January 1.

Basis of future work is a preliminary report prepared by Committee Counsel Hyman I. Fischbach outlining nearly 100 administrative and legislative proposals.

The Fischbach recommendations are aimed generally at closing loopholes through which criminals may now slip to freedom, and at increasing penalties of crime repeaters.

Included are proposals to give the police department more men, better pay aand more powers for arresting suspects. Others would tighten present methods of procedure in the District Attorney's office.

The subcommittee also will consider exactly how it will create a continuing District Council on Law Enforcement.

David said his group must decide whether the council would have more impact if established by an act of Congress or should be a voluntary affair. He made clear yesterday he believed such a council, composed of representatives of all law enforcement agencies, holds the key to making committee recommendations stick.

The crime probe practically has been at a standstill for two months.

Foxhall Rd. to Be Closed Monday for Four Months

Foxhall rd. nw., between Whitehaven pkwy. and Reservoir rd. will be closed to traffic Monday morning at 7:30 a. m. for about four months to permit widening, leveling, straightening and paving of the 1000-foot strip.

District Highway Director J. N. Robertson said the roadway will be doubled in width to 44 feet and paved with concrete. The steep grade north of Reservoir rd. will be cut down and most of the twists taken out of the winding road, he said.

Since the opening of the Whitehurst Freeway last fall, Foxhall rd. has become an increasingly important traffic link between the freeway and upper Massachusetts ave.

Robertson said Foxhall rd. traffic will be detoured around the construction on Whitehaven pkwy. and Reservoir rd., which intersect at MacArthur blvd.

Family Cases Here Require Special Court, Judge Says

Kirkland Proposes Creation of Tribunal To Handle Juveniles, Home-Related Cases

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

Washington needs a Family Court to handle the problems created by broken homes and juvenile delinquency, Judge James R. Kirkland of District Court said yesterday.

Judge Kirkland proposed widespread judicial reforms to eliminate the situation now caused by duplication of effort in Juvenile Court and District Court, and said that there should be regular conferences of officials and interested laymen to handle the domestic relations situation.

"Family problems are getting worse and worse," he said. "Too many women are employed here leaving children on the loose. In Protestant churches at least, there is not enough attendance at services and Sunday schools. It is time the courts stepped in."

He then called attention to the crowded divorce-custody docket in District Court, and an overburdened Juvenile Court judge.

Can't Do Job Now

"I personally cannot do my job properly as things stand," he declared. "I have neither the time to hear cases as fully as I would like nor is there always sufficient concrete information for me to make just decisions in family matters."

He then outlined the system which he would like to see put into effect in Washington. He said it would make the city the most advanced in the field throughout the Nation.

Here is what he proposed:

1. Take two judges from District Court and Judge Cockrill from Juvenile Court to comprise the bench of the Family Court. It should not be under Federal jurisdiction but under the city government and could be housed in the District Court building when that tribunal moves in 18 month.

Rotate Judges

2. Rotate the judges so that they hear different kinds of family problems. This, he said, would allow male judges to try certain juvenile cases. "Juvenile Court needs help and it needs a man jurist which it has never had," he said.

3. Have testimony before trial examiners in family litigation, the examiners to be chosen from qualified members of the District Bar. The examiners will be paid adequate fees and from their ranks could come other judges when needed. The final decision in all cases will be made by a judge, however.

4. The Domestic Relations Commissioner could hear testimony where the parties are too impoverished to pay examiners fees. The commissioner should be empowered to make full investigations of the family situation.

5. Welfare groups should make full reports to the court in all needed cases and could coordinate their work through the court.

Marriage Counselors

6. Have a "friend-of-the-court" system and marriage counselors who will attempt to bring back together estranged couples and make sure destitute wives and children are supported by husbands and father.

7. Annual conferences of laymen, social workers and lawyers should be held so that long-range integrated plans can be made to meet the problem.

Judge Kirkland said that at present the District Court has little or no contact with Juvenile Court. Thus, he said, proceedings involving the child in Juvenile Court are seldom ever seen by the judge who must either break up the home or keep it together in a divorce case.

Records to Be Open

It will mean, the judge said, that Juvenile Court records will be open insofar as the adults before it are concerned, such as in cases where an adult has contributed to the delinquency of a minor or in non-support cases. But, still, he said, the records of juveniles could be kept from public scrutiny.

"As things now stand," Judge Kirkland went on, "we in District Court can do practically nothing to prevent a child from going astray. And Juvenile Court can do nothing to prevent the broken home which so often results in the rejected, delinquent child."

"A Family Court would be far more effective and by the saving resulting from eliminating duplication would be cheaper in the long run. Also, by providing an office and machinery by which alimony and maintenance can be collected, welfare fund savings would be tremendous," he concluded.

Death of Cancer Patient In Fall Is Ruled Suicide

W. V. M. Bus Strike Ends With Raises

The Washington, Virginia and Maryland Coach Co. (Arnold Bus Lines), has reached an agreement with its striking union employes, it was announced yesterday.

H. J. Harris, president of the union, Division 1079, Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employees (AFL), said the agreement virtually embodies an arbitration award of last September 9.

The agrement is retroactive to May 18, 1949, the date the old contract ran out, and is effective to August 18, 1951.

It gives the 300 workers a 17-cents-an-hour raise and fringe tween trips, lunch time, time to benefits including layover time bemake out reports, minimum wage guarantees and others, Harris said.

The union agreed to withdraw a petition to the Interstate Commerce Commission asking revocation of a 5-cent fare increase granted the company on April 10, 1950.

At the time it filed the petition, the union charged that the company won the fare increase with the argument that it was needed to pay the wage increase provided by the arbitration award.

Under the Virginia Public Utilities Labor Regulations Act, the Virginia State Corporation Commission has operated the Arnold Line since November 2, 1949, when the strike began.

Harris said the State will return the property to the company at 12:01 a. m. Tuesday. Company officials were not available for comment. Terms of the new agreement go into effect Monday.

Under the new scale, top pay for operators will go from $1.35 an hour to $1.52 an hour, and for mechanics from $1.48 to $1.65 an hour for a 40-hour week.

Retroactive pay will be as follows: Fifty dollars in a lump sum to each employe by August 5, and $10 per month thereafter until the full amount is covered.

In Wytheville

3 in Same Family Are Polio Victims

Wythevile, Va., July 29 (AP).—This polio-stricken southwest Virginia community today reported four new cases, three in one family.

The latest victims from Wytheville and adjoining Wythe county—hardest hit spot in the Nation—included from the single family a 16-month-old girl, an eight-year-old boy and a 10-year-old boy.

State Health Department figures showed the area of about 23,000 inhabitants has had 11 deaths and 88 cases since July 1, an average of more than three cases of the disease every day.

The State health Department said in Richmond today it had received reports of 197 cases in the entire State. This is almost three times the number reported in 1944, worst previous polio year in Virginia.

No. D. C. Polio Epidemic Seen by Health Official

Poliomyelitis in Washington is well below the epidemic level, a District Health Department official said yesterday.

Thirteen new cases were reported last week, bringing the city's total for the year to 38. But Dr. Carl C. Dauer, head of the Health Department's bureau of preventable diseases, said the District's polio rate is less than 5 cases per 100,000 population. This is about one-fifth of what is generally considered an epidemic, he said.

Six, or less than half of the cases reported last week showed some form of paralysis, he said. And six area victims were discharged from Washington hospitals during the week.

One Washington victim died during the week and 11 persons were hospitalized. At this time last year 13 District cases had been reported.

O'Boyle in his residence. In the group (from left), Shinso Hami, Mayor of Hiroshima; Tsunei Kusunose, Governor of Hiroshima Prefecture, and Tokutaro Kitamura, former finance minister, were accompanied by Mother Elizabeth Nagato and Sister Dolores Sakamoto, who are attending Catholic University, and Mrs. Yukika Sohma, daughter of a former Mayor of Tokyo, who sent to the District the first cherry blossoms

INSPECT RECORDS—A Japanese police chief who has visited Scotland Yard and the French Surete thinks Washington's police statistical and filing system is the most efficient. Eiji Suzuki (left) Chief of Police of Osaka, Japan complimented Capt. Thomas Rasmusen, in charge of the files, through his interpreter, David Takahara (center) of Tokyo, on a visit to police headquarters yesterday

D. C. Police Setup Lauded By Japanese

A Japanese police chief thinks Washington has the best statistical and filing system in its police department he has ever seen—and he is going to put it into use in his own home town.

He is Chief Eiji Suzuki of Osaka, a city of about two million people. Chief Suzuki, who accompanied a delegation of Japanese city heads to Washington, has also visited Scotland Yard in England and the Surete National in Paris. The Washington central communications and records system is more efficient than these, in Chief Suzuki's opinion.

The Washington police central communications and record system bureau was started after The Washington Post exposed the police practice of "pocketing" crime complaints, which resulted in a systematic official understatement of the city's crime situation. The new records system started partial operation on January 1, 1948.

All crime complaints to reach the Police Department now are recorded in the bureau, which receives reports by teletype from the precincts.

Chief Suzuki spent most of yesterday at police headquarters here or in a radio scout car. He said Osaka's two million population is served by a force of 8600 men, as compared with the approximately 1900 men for Washington's less than a million.

He said Osaka has only two police cars with two-way shortwave radio, as compared with from 75 to 80 for Washington. The Japanese police head said he hopes to receive 30 additional cars from General MacArthur within the year, and plans to increase the number to 100 within that time. Within the next two years, he hopes to have 130 such cars.

Chief Suzuki said that about 100 women serve on the Osaka force to take care of women prisoners.

He also had words of praise for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which he inspected Friday. He was particularly impressed, he said, with FBI methods of scientific identification, and with the Justice Department's library for lawyers and prosecutors.

Archbishop Praises Japanese Christians

Receiving a group of Japanese government leaders, Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle yesterday praised the Japanese government and people for "the wonderful reception Christianity has received in Japan since the war."

The mayors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki were among the nine callers at the Archbishop's residence. The nine are members of a group of 53 Japanese returning from a moral rearmament conference in Switzerland.

Seven labor leaders in the delegation were received yesterday at CIO headquarters by Allan Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization.

In the afternoon the entire group visited Mt. Vernon and laid a wreath on George Washington's tomb.

The group, which includes six members of the Diet and seven governors of prefectures, has been in Washington since Thursday. The visit extends to Monday.

Pool Bond Issue Held 'Misleading'

Nonpartisan Arlington County Board members yesterday charged a proposed $500,000 swimming pool bond issue, coming up for a vote next Tuesday, has been "misrepresented" to county voters.

The Arlington Democratic Club, which collected signatures for the bond issue petition, has called the bond issue "self-liquidating."

Non-partisan board member Mrs. Florence Cannon said yesterday at a board session that revenue bonds for swimming pools would carry a "prohibitive" rate of interest, if the county were to try to sell them.

Daniel A. Dugan, board chairman, declared: "If the people of Arlington County vote for these swimming pools, it's going to mean an increase in their tax rate, if there isn't an increase (in county tax values) in the reassessment. Or else the children of Arlington County are going to pay $1 or $1.50 to get into them."

Robert Cox, who first raised the issue of "misrepresentation," said after the meeting he would vote for the bond issue, but pointed out the referendum merely "authorized" the County Board to sell the bonds.

"If it looks like it will take money (to pay for the pools) I'll only vote to spend part of them," he said.

Democrat F. Freeland Chew, elected as an independent, commented afterwards: "I favor swimming pools. But I favor first things first, and there are a lot more essential projects."

Members of the Arlington Democratic Club, which sponsored the pool bond issue, hope it will pay for three pools, intluding one for Negroes.

UCS Issues Directory of Welfare Aid

A capsule version of Greater Washington's health, welfare and recreation services has been issued by the United Community Services.

In the form of a pocket-size booklet entitled "Where to Turn," the summary lists 334 agencies and institutions in the area to which individuals may apply for help.

The booklet was prepared under the direction of Mrs. Ruth E. Willis, secretary of the information and referral department of UCS. It includes not only Community Chest agencies but also those supported privately or by local, State or Federal tax funds.

The pamphlet is indexed under such subjects as adult education, aged care, children and their adoption, convalescent care, etc.

More than 1300 copies have been issued and UCS has announced it is filling additional orders daily. A charge of 25 cents is made to help defray printing and mailing costs. Quantity orders for organizations and business firms are handled at a discount.

Mrs. Willis said that broad distribution of the directory may "lighten the load" of from 200 to 400 requests for help received directly by her department each month. These requests are usually for basic emergency relief or for information.

A vital part of the job, Mrs. Willis said, is "explaining to desperate men and women that when agencies are unable to help, it is because of lack of resources, not lack of desire."

In Memoriam

ISLER, WILLIAM F. In loving memory of my dear husband, WILLIAM F. ISLER, who departed this life three years ago today.
Forget you? No!
I never will.
I love you then,
I love you still.
Your memory is as fresh today as in the hour you passed away.
YOUR LOVING WIFE.

WILLIAMS, ANGUS GRADY. In sad but loving memory of my darling husband, ANGUS GRADY WILLIAMS, who left me so suddenly, one year ago today, July 30, 1949.
No one knows how much I miss you,
No one knows the bitter pain
I have suffered since I lost you,
Life has never been the same.
No more upon this earth I'll see
Your kind and loving face.
No one in this whole wide world
Will ever take your place.
Although your soul is now at rest
And free from care and pain,
This World would seem like Heaven
If I had you back again.
They say time heals a broken heart
But, oh, that's so untrue
For one whole year my heart has ached
Grady, darling, just for you.
I'll always remember in my heart
The happiness we knew
And that my only world
Is the one in which I lived with you.
YOUR LOVING WIFE AND FAMILY

Clown Goes Berserk, Kills Two, Then Self

Seattle, Wash., July 29 (U.P.).—A rodeo clown whose antics with a trained mule won laughter throughout the West killed two members of his family, wounded three others and then killed himself, police said today.

Police said Frank Chitwood, 46, went berserk at a farm house 18 miles south of here last night and shouting "I'm going to get even," opened fire on his family with a .32-caliber pistol.

He shot and killed his baby daughter and his father-in-law, wounded his estranged wife, their 4-year-old son and his mother-in-law before turning the gun on himself.

Investigating officers said Chitwood broke into the home of his father-in-law, Everett Vanderhoof, 48, brandishing the pistol.

When 12-year-old Marilyn Vanderhoof tried to stop him with a .22 caliber rifle, he brushed her aside, shouting:

"I don't care about you . . . I'm going to get even with the others."

He fatally shot Vanderhoof and the Chitwoods' 9-month-old daughter, Drucella, who was lying in a baby buggy. Then he wounded his wife, Margaret, 22, their son Frank 4, and Mrs. Vanderhoof.

Finally he turned the gun on himself.

The three wounded were reported in serious condition today.

King County Coroner John P. Brill, jr., said Mrs. Chitwood and her husband separated July 4.

Action Set on Airport Bill

A House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Subcommittee is slated to act Monday on the Senate-approved bill for a second civilian airport in the Washington area.

Subcommittee Chairman Lindley Beckworth (D., Tex.) gave the strongest hint of his personal support of the measure yesterday when he told reporters:

"I hope the subcommittee takes action favorable to meet the needs of the area."

The bill, authorizing a 14 million dollar terminal to supplement crowded National Airport, was passed by the Senate unanimously last spring.

It has been delayed by prolonged hearings, periods of inaction and site inspection trips since it reached the House subcommittee more than three months ago.

The bill has the indorsement of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, Department of Defense and the General Services Administration.

Election Race

Friends Vie For Office In Girls Nation

Marvella Belle Hern of Enid, Okla., a worldly farm girl of 17, and Margaret Haley Guenther of Detroit, Mich., a tall brunette of the same age, were nominated yesterday for president of Girls Nation. The election will be Monday.

Together with 96 other high school girls from all the States and Panama, they are taking part in the six-day School for Citizenship sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary.

First reaction when the two junior misses met after their nomination was "Oh, not YOU."

Best of Friends

They have adjoining rooms at Mount Vernon Seminary where the conference is taking place. In fact, just the night before they had become best of friends, each pledging she was "not interested in politics."

"We were drafted. That's all," Margaret explains.

Marvella is the candidate of the Federalists Party. She hopes to lay the ground work for a Girls World is elected.

"The fear we have in the world today is terrific," she declared. "And if we get to know the people of the world we won't need to be afraid."

Margaret's goal, if she's president, is to see that every girl carries back home with her "the wonderful feeling of friendship we all have here."

To Study Government

Vice presidential nominees are Sally McFague of Milton, Mass., of the Federalist Party, and Judy Alexander of Montclair, N. J., of the Nationalists.

For the next five days the girls will study the Federal Government. After Justice Harold Burton outlines the functions of the Supreme Court Monday morning, the girls will take a swing at a few decisions themselves. Later they'll hear from Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson and Vice Chairman of the Democratic National Committee Mrs. India Edwards.

Tuesday morning they will try passing a few bills of their own and then have a chat with Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.), and later Undersecretary of State James E. Webb will address them. Wednesday morning President Truman will explain the duties of the Chief Executive.

Chiropractic Group to Meet Here Friday

More than 2500 chiropractic physicians will meet today through Friday at the Statler Hotel for the annual convention of the National Chiropractic Association.

Meeting concurrently will be the National Women's Chiropractic Auxiliary and a number of specialized councils affiliated with the National Chiropractic Association.

The six days of legislative business, scientific symposia, council meetings, and sightseeing, will be highlighted Thursday night with a banquet and ball, which Vice President Alben J. Barkley, Representative Walter B. Huber (D., Ohio) and Representative Harold O. Lovre (R., S. Dak.) are scheduled to attend.

Other conventions scheduled for Washington this week include:

Cleveland Keeps Check On Employe Loyalty

Cleveland, July 29 (AP).—Mayor Thomas A. Burke disclosed today that a continuous security check is being made of all city employes who have contact with vital installations such as the water works.

The check is being conducted by Martin P. Cooney, lieutenant in charge of the Police Bureau of Special Investigation. A list of known and suspected Communists in Cleveland has been prepared.

Two veteran officials whose combined service in the District government totals 58 years will retire Monday.

Bachman

They are Deputy Assessor Byers M. Bachman and Frank J. Neff, assistant release engineer in the highway department.

Bachman, 71, became chief accountant for the District Public Utilities Commission in 1924 after a career as a railroad employe, treasurer of a girls' college in Georgia, superintendent of a military school in Tennessee and accountant for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

When Edward A. Dent became assessor in 1939, he asked for Bachman as his deputy. Bachman usually got to the office at 7:30 a. m., nearly an hour ahead of anyone else, and stayed on the job a year and half after most city employes are required to retire.

Bachman and his wife have sold their home at 4429 Lowell st. nw., but he said they haven't decided definitely where they're go'ng.

Neff

Neff, 61, started in 1918 as a clerk in the building inspector's office, but soon became secretary to a succession of assistant engineer commissioners.

When Capt. H. C. Whitehurst left that office in 1929 to become director of highways, Neff went with him as secretary and later as administrative assistant. He held the job until Whitehurst died two years ago.

Neff's present duties consist of coordinating utility installations with street paving work—to see to it that all necessary underground cables and pipes are installed before a street is paved. He and his wife live at 3413 Ordway st. nw.

The Kremlin Sets Out to Repair a Major Blunder

By Ferdinand Kuhn

Post Reporter

THE myth of Soviet cleverness dies hard. So does the legend that Soviet tactics never change.

Both of these fables of American folklore were still alive and kicking last week when the news came that the Kremlin had apparently ended its six months' boycott of the United Nations.

Most officials kept their heads, but the first response of many observers was to worry, to wonder what the Russians had up their sleeves, and to talk dolefully about the future of the U. N. and of peace itself.

What was forgotten, or minimized in many minds, was that the Kremlin had done itself world-wide damage since the walkout began. The boycott of the U. N. has been as self-defeating, and as hard for the outer world to understand, as the refusal to join in the Marshall Plan three years ago.

Peter Fleming, a British explorer and author who has traveled the length and breadth of Asia, had this to say in the Spectator of London earlier this month:

"Of our late enemies, the Germans often behaved in a stupid way, the Italians in a silly way and the Japanese in an absolutely inane way. But the Russian conduct is so unaccountable that even those who hold them in the greatest awe are often hard put to it to discern in their retreats and their advances, their outbursts and their silences, the thread of a dark and continuing purpose."

Certainly the Soviet purpose is there; a thousand voices of Communist propaganda have proclaimed it day after day, for more than 30 years. But the Soviet boycott has had such embarrassing effects, from the Kremlin's own standpoint, that the return to Lake Success can only be an attempt to repair a colossal blunder.

Missed Korea Veto

CONSIDER for a moment what the boycott has achieved. It has deprived the Soviet Union of the invaluable propaganda platform of U. N. agencies. It has enabled the Security Council and other U. N. bodies to transact their business more smoothly than ever before, and without the irritant of Soviet speeches and parliamentary wrangles.

If the Soviet delegate had been present at the time of the Korean invasion, he could have vetoed the resolutions for a cease-fire and withdrawal, and for the use of troops, and he could have delayed or obstructed alternative action in a hundred different ways.

As it was, the Security Council was able to act with unprecedented speed. It laid down terms for ending the Korean war, and it produced the rudiments of an international army, flying the U. N. flag, and under an American general as a United Nations commander. What is more, it evoked the moral or material support of 52 out of the 59 members of the United Nations against the Soviet cause.

The political damage of these events, from the Soviet standpoint, has not been offset by the spectacle of General MacArthur's army being pushed into a tiny corner of southeastern Korea, or by the military prowess of the Soviet-trained invaders, or by the inevitable bitterness of Koreans, in the North and South, at having their country become a battleground.

No matter how many military successes the Communists may be winning, it cannot be pleasant for the Kremlin to see American and other air, sea and ground units in action only a couple of hours' flying time from the Soviet border near Vladivostok.

Nor can it be good for Soviet security to watch the sleeping giant in the United States marshalling his strength, and beginning to tap the prodigious industrial power which Stalin learned to know and respect in the last war.

No Change of Heart

ALL of these considerations must have been in the Soviet leaders' minds, and must have influenced to some extent, at least, the decision to return to the U. N. council table.

But nobody in his right mind believes that the Russians have had a change of heart, or that they will be good and cooperative members of the U. N. from now on. When resistance has compelled a tactical retreat, as it did in Berlin last year, as it probably did in the present instance, the Russians have known how to exploit their tactical advantages elsewhere.

They have many cards to play this time. The least promising of them is the Korean issue itself, for on this the United States and its friends can stand firmly on the Security Council resolutions passed in Russia's absence. There is no way under the Charter to overturn these decisions and to get the U. N. to accept the virtual conquest of Southern Korea as an accomplished fact.

The Russians can, of course, argue interminably that decisions of the Security Council taken in their absence were illegal.

But on a dozen occasions before the boycott began, the Soviet delegate abstained without subsequently challenging what the Council decided. After Andrei Gromyko staged his famous walkout in 1946, at the

Korea Heartens Jap Nationalists

By Hessell Tiltman

Mr. Tiltman, chief Far Eastern correspondent for the London Daily Herald, was a correspondent with both the Chinese and Japanese forces in the Sino-Japanese War, and after World War II he returned to Tokyo to cover General MacArthur's headquarters. He is the author of several books on Japan and Pacific affairs.

TOKYO—Japanese reaction to the war on its doorstep has been mixed.

The Yoshida Cabinet is cooperating, so far as cooperation is called for, willingly (Said one high-ranking member of Premier Shigeru Yoshida's party to me: "We merely have to follow faithfully the orders issued by the Supreme Commander. But we can obey those orders willingly or unwillingly. I can assure you that the cabinet is cooperating willingly").

The Japanese press—on the whole better informed than the foreign press, which is not surprising, for the best Korean experts in the world are Japanese and the situation has been fluid—is clearly hoping that the Korean "incident" will underline the importance of Japan in the world strategic picture and boost the country's bargaining power when a peace treaty or new occupation statute comes up for serious discussion.

Japan's ruling class is trying to conceal its jubilation at the turn of events. It foresaw immediately that the new American commitments in Korea and Formosa would make Japan's friendship more precious, and hasten the handing back to Japanese authorities of many economic controls earlier than had been anticipated. "With General MacArthur running a war," its spokesmen argued, "he won't want to be bothered with financial and trade details and will turn over more decisions to the Japanese government." First indication that they may have guessed right was General MacArthur's letter to Premier Yoshida authorizing the recruiting of a 75,000 strong police reserve—under the direct control of the central government.

Nationalists See Opportunity

JAPAN'S nationalists nurse hopes that go beyond an augmented police force; they hope that the Korean war may pave the way for the re-creation of a Japanese army, maybe cloaked at first as a "peace preservation corps" under the orders of the United Nations commander. As one former Japanese general put it: "The need in Korea is for fighters who can live on a bowl of rice daily, which means Asiatics." A Tokyo pedicab driver, asked if he would volunteer for such a force, replied succinctly: "Why not? In the last war I was a 'superior private' (Japanese Pfc), and a superior private was a king."

The Japanese masses, and particularly the women, are still antiwar, or at least anti any war likely to involve Japan. During the first days following the Communist attack on South Korea, the little people were badly frightened. Property values in downtown Tokyo declined sharply (a local wisecrack has it that the house next door to the United States Embassy, where General MacArthur lives, could be bought for $500!) while prices asked for farmhouses in nearby mountain districts, outside the effective radius of atom bombs dropped on central Tokyo, rose sharply.

The sending of winter futon (bedding) to the countryside for safekeeping—an early symptom of war nerves in Japan these days—began. Tokyo residents started buying up canned foods for hoarding. (Occupation wives also began queueing up to mail furs, silver and other valuables back to the safety of the United States.)

Nation Also Relieved

NEVERTHELESS, if Japan was inclined to be jittery, the nation was also in a sense relieved. I was attending a meeting of Japanese journalists when the news broke that President Truman had ordered United States sea and air forces into action to aid the hard-pressed South Korean Republic, and the effect of the announcement was profound. Every journalist present agreed that if the United Nations and the United States had not acted, and promptly, the whole Orient might have gone Communist within a year or so. They spoke hopefully of American action "clearing the air."

Japanese military men (and it should be remembered that in Japan are many men—former military personnel of Japan's prewar garrison in Korea—who have devoted most

As the Peasant Goes, So Will Go Asia

By Wolf I. Ladejinsky

THIS is a condensation of the lead article in the July 22 issue of Saturday Review of Literature, reprinted with the permision of that magazine. The author, Wolf I. Ladejinsky, is the chief of the Far East Division of the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations of the Agriculture Department. The views expressed are his own and not necessarily those of the department, the Saturday Review of Literature points out. Mr. Ladejinsky has spent most of the postwar years in the Orient.

THE CHINESE peasant seemed out of his mind. He kept jumping up and down, making strange gestures with his fingers and palms, working them in a semicircular fashion around his mouth. My interpreter chatted with him briefly, then explained the situation to me.

It was the paper the peasant held in his hand that caused his hysteria. That paper was the deed to the single acre of land which he had worked as a tenant for the past 32 years. Now that precious acre of land belonged to him!

This scene, which I witnessed not long ago in the courtyard of the land office of the small village of Kwangsi, deep in the heart of China, epitomizes the problem and promise of all Asia. It sums up the present and perhaps the future of a continent where agrarian discontent is gnawing at the vitals of the old order. It is on this strife the Communists have been able to capitalize so successfully by posing as advocates of reforms designed to benefit the peasantry.

Four fifths of the continent's vast population are peasants. Agriculture is the pivot of its economic life. Industry has made but a small dent in the character of Asia, notwithstanding oil gushers in Iran, tin mines in Malaya and Siam, jute and cotton mills in India. The ambitious postwar schemes for industrialization throughout Asia as yet remain mostly blueprints. The heart of the problem of Asia today lies in the countryside. An overworked and overexploited peasantry that for centuries was inertly miserable is now alertly miserable.

The reasons for the age-old wretchedness of the Asiatic peasant can be summarized in a brief sentence: too many people, too little land. Pitifully small holdings, inadequate tools and institutional arrangements over which the peasant has no control intensify his plight.

A large part of the misery and hunger arises from the relationship between the peasants and the landowners, a relationship which the courts and local officials have given official sanction through the centuries. The peasants have been obliged to pay exorbitant rentals, for they have no bargaining power. Nor is their contract of tenancy worth the paper it is written on; it may be altered or abrogated at any time at the whim of the landlord.

Now the forces that keep the peasant within well-defined bounds are breaking down under rising agrarian discontent. The peasantry is at last in motion. The Communists have exploited this fact and placed it in the center of Asiatic politics.

The catastrophe of China is a case in point. Many are the reasons that explain the victory of the Communists and why in 1949 Nationalist China could not boast of a single Leonidas holding a single Thermopylae. But one cause seems to me beyond dispute: Nationalist China was pressed and pushed over not so much by force of arms as by the Russian Communist tactic of giving land to the poverty-stricken, landless, hopeless peasantry.

The peasants know nothing and care less about "Marxism, Leninism, and Stalinism" and they are surely not eager for collectivization. The Communists, however, promise them not collectivization as it exists in the Soviet Union but land with which the peasants may do as they please. And the peasants, in sheer despair, believe the promises, if for no other reason than that thus far in Asia the Communists have not yet had the opportunity to betray their promises as they did in Russia.

Toward the end of his life Lenin despaired of a Communist victory in western Europe. He visualized the final crucial battle as a conflict between a Communistic East and a capitalistic West. In this struggle, China and India were to join Russia as the forces of communism. To win Chinese and Indian support, Stalin developed a program for those countries consisting of three stages: a struggle against foreign imperialism, an agrarian revolution under the leadership of the Communist Party and, finally, a proletarian dictatorship. The key step was to be the wooing of the peasants.

Stalin's "three-stage" program of revolution, as exemplified by China, is now being exported to Indo-China, to Burma, the Philippines and Indonesia, and even into little-known Hyderabad. The revolt last year in Hyderabad was a peasant uprising, about the largest, and for a brief moment perhaps the most effective, in Asia outside of China, and it was under Communist leadership. The uprising was finally crushed and the Communists jailed, yet it is worth noting that, as in China, the peasants of Hyderabad were not enticed by Communist dogma but merely followed the welcome Communist bait of "Land and Liberty in Asia."

Many people wouldn't hesitate to approve of a revolutionary movement if it is the only way the common man can secure his elementary wants. But we must realize how serious a threat an agrarian revolution could be at this point of history, even if the upheaval seems justifiable from that point of view. The only way to thwart Communist designs on Asia is to preclude such revolutionary outbursts through timely reforms, peacefully, before the peasants take the law into their own hands and set the countryside ablaze.

Encouraging in the seemingly dismal situation in Asia is the fact that the American agrarian tradition of "40 acres and a mule," or an Asian variety thereof, offers a better solution of the agrarian problem than the new Communist ideology. This is quite apart from the consideration that the latest events in China and the implied threat to the rest of Asia oblige us to bolster our position there with something more lasting and effective than we have done thus far. The positive and prompt decision to place the peasant "in the center of the piece," as Nehru once put it, is essential if non-Communist regimes are to survive.

According to Nehru, India and Asia as a whole are confronted with no more urgent task than agrarian readjustment. This presupposes: (1) the improvement of agricultural techniques in order to raise farm production; (2) an approximation to an adequate standard of life through raising the output per man, providing good credit and marketing facilities, fair taxation, health and educational facilities; (3) proper utilization of land and water resources; and (4) a basic change in landlord-tenant relationships, which in certain parts of Asia is Left, a Chinese peasant and his three daughters work their rice paddy in Hunan Province. Right, a farmer of India cleans his primitive plowshare—a pointed stick tipped with metal. These people need technological assistance, of course, says Mr. Ladejinsky, but first there must be land reform to give them an incentive

WORLD AFFAIRS

Western Europe Less Prepared Than in 1939

By Charles E. Whiting

LONDON.—Western Europe, more united economically than ever before, is far from ready to fight as a smooth working team in any Third World War.

It is leaning heavily on the United States in its efforts to build up defensive forces. So far the help that has come from across the Atlantic has been a mere trickle.

Some progress, however, has been made in revitalizing defenses sapped by the destruction of World War II, or left to wither in the reconstruction emergencies of the postwar period.

The military picture has changed so drastically in the 11 years since Hitler sent his armies into Poland that comparisons with 1939 are invalid. But a survey of defense preparations covering 11 western Europe capitals indicates that a general outbreak of war would find the west even less prepared than it was then.

The United States has sent over some small arms, bazookas and communications equipment. Britain has received a few B-29 Superfortresses and eventually will get more. But as a whole, the big stuff is still to come.

America also is training western European officers and men in war-tested battle tactics. It is also helping friendly countries build factories to produce the vast quantities of supplies they may need to defend themselves.

Surplus Stores Rolling

THIS is the work of the Mutual Defense Assistance Program, an offshoot of the Economic Coordinating Committee. It is all tied in with North Atlantic Treaty, which binds the North Atlantic community of 12 nations to mutual defense.

"We were slow getting started because of the delay in setting up the North Atlantic Treaty organization," an MDAP spokesman said at its headquarters here. "But the end items—military supplies taken from United States surplus stores—are starting to flow in. This phase of American aid should be rolling full speed by the end of this year.

"Training programs have been started in the United States command in western Germany and in the various North Atlantic Treaty countries. Some teams are being sent to the United States for training.

"A start has been made, also, on standardizing arms and equipment. A great deal of standardization naturally will be attained by the use of American supplies."

The most optimistic observers say it will be two years before this ambitious program pays off in a defensively strong, militarily united western Europe. In the meantime, the swift developments in the Korean fighting are reflected in the worried stock-taking of western defense chiefs.

MOST of the 11 countries surveyed have civil defense corps in various stages of preparation. Some are studying blueprints for converting peacetime plants to war production.

Britain and France, twin keystones of the western defense structure, are obliged to divert some of their attention from preparedness to sideline colonial campaigns.

The British are busy trying, with a force of undisclosed size, to clean up Communist-supported dissident groups in Malaya. France has 200,000 troops, including many of its battle-hardened noncommissioned officers, fighting the equally-stubborn Viet Minh in Indo-China.

Western Germany has no army. Italy, weakened by its peace treaty but now a member of the North Atlantic community, has a military force that is a mere shadow of that in Mussolini's heyday.

Here is a country-by-country breakdown of Western Europe's defense setup:

Britain

RECONSTITUTION of Britain's Territorial Army (national guard) in 1947 to make it a part of the regular army has given Britain the strongest army in the west.

Britain's army, navy and air force, including the territorials, national service men and women auxiliaries, number 827,000—compared with a total of 480,000 in mid-1939.

National service trainees serve 18 months and then go into the territorials for four more years, training on weekends and vacations.

The army could count on 464,000 fully trained men and women in the event of war.

The navy has one carrier and four light carriers in its active fleet. In addition, there are 14 cruisers, 34 destroyers and 69 auxiliary craft. There are no battleships on active duty, but five are in reserve—along with other units—or being used for training. Navy personnel numbers 146,000.

The RAF, with a manpower force of 216,700, is split into home and overseas commands.

Units of undisclosed strength are stationed at Cyprus, Hongkong, Singapore and other smaller colonial bases, as well as in occupied Germany. Most fighter squadrons are equipped with new jet planes.

Britain's air strength is bolstered by American Air Force groups stationed here for training. At present, there is one B-29 squadron available. Two others are expected soon, accompanied by a squadron of jet fighter-bombers.

The volunteer civil defense corps numbers 30,000 and has room for expansion to twice that number. These are being given training once a week in atomic and germ warfare defense.

France

FRANCE has two armored divisions and three infantry divisions at virtually full strength—between 15,000 and 17,000—on duty in France or in German and Austrian occupation zones. She also has one mountain division and one airborne division at less than full strength.

The French have two infantry divisions in North Africa, plus scattered battalions and regiments in other colonies, exclusive of Indo-China.

French Defense Ministry estimates of her total domestic strength are army, 176,845 officers and men; air force, 66,890, and navy, 53,600. There are 56,000 in the gendarmerie, which is a sort of state police force under army jurisdiction.

France has a pool of reserves in a universal military conscription system that takes youths at the age of 21 for a year's training. Because of the German occupation, however, there are 300,000 men who never received military training. The Defense Ministry says it will be 1953 before it has a good cushion of trained manpower.

The army currently lacks modern tanks. But it is hoping the United States will provide 3500 in three years. The French air force has roughly 500 craft of all types, including 200 jets, according to unofficial sources.

Civilian defense and industrial mobilization plans are secret. There are no outward signs that much progress has been made in either direction.

Western Germany

THE three western allies have an estimated total of nearly 250,000 troops in western Germany—about 100,000 Americans; same number in British zone, including some Danish, Norwegians and Belgians; less than 50,000 French.

There are perhaps 300 planes, of which 230 are American. The United States has about 75 jet fighters, but official figures are unavailable.

No civilian defense program is operating.

Italy

ITALY is handicapped by peace treaty limitations, many of which were insisted upon by Russia. The treaty limits her to an army of 250,000, including the carabinieri branch of police.

The Italian navy has been stripped down to 25,000 men and a fleet of two old battleships, four cruisers and four destroyers.

Italy's air force of 25,000 men has only a few squadrons of patched up and outmoded American P-51s and British Spitfires. She has no bombers, as the peace treaty outlawed all "offensive-type" weapons.

Her only two fully armed army divisions are both stationed in the northeast near the Yugoslav and Austrian frontiers, historic invasion battleground. Peace left Italy without war industries. Her former arms plants have turned to peacetime production and are not in a position for quick conversion to war production.

Austria

THERE are an estimated 70,000 soldiers in Austria—but the country has no army. Roughly 45,000 of the occupation troops are Russian.

There is no Austrian air force, no navy, no conscription, no civil defense program and no plans for conversion of industry to war production.

The present draft of an Austrian peace treaty, snarled in east-west quarreling over terms, authorizes an army of 53,000 men, mostly for frontier guard work.

In brief, Austria is a country which may be fought over, but which will do no fighting while the present situation exists.

Switzerland

SWITZERLAND has no standing army, but she could mobilize about 700,000 men, including auxiliary services and air defense forces, from her well-trained reserves. Men between 20 and 48 must take annual military training and in the event of war men up to 60 can be mobilized.

The army has a strong artillery force. The air force is made up of about 1000 planes, including some British jets.

Denmark

DENMARK drafts 15,000 to 20,000 men yearly for army training, normally at 18 years of age, plus some 3000 for the navy. Also, she has a home guard of 40,000 men.

Her navy consists of 70 units, mostly corvettes, torpedo boats and a few submarines. She has a 70-plane air force of jet fighters and British Spitfires—no bombers.

Denmark's estimated total military force in an emergency is 100,000 to half again that many men.

Belgium

BELGIUM'S military strength is set at 73,700 soldiers, sailors and air force men. She is building up her air force fighter strength, mostly with new jets, but has no bombers. The biggest Belgian navy ship is a frigate.

All Belgians must have 18 months military training, usually starting at the age of 18. There is no organized civilian defense group.

Netherlands

HOLLAND started to rebuild her fighting units this year, following the end of post-war colonial troubles in Indonesia. The greater part of her conscript troops have been repatriated from Indonesia, where many received their training under actual combat conditions.

The Dutch army now numbers 47,000—mostly a staff nucleus for a larger fighting force—and the navy, 23,000. There are about 10,000 in the Dutch air force.

The navy has one light carrier, three cruisers, seven destroyers, 63 assorted smaller warcraft and a larger number of auxiliary vessels. Under construction are two cruisers, 12 destroyers and four submarines.

Holland's air force aims at turning out well-trained fighter squadrons equipped with late jet planes. Most of them are British Meteors. Defense precautions include a number of highly-trained antiaircraft crews.

Sweden

EVERY Swede from 19 to 47 is liable for military service and the present class, plus army regulars, brings Sweden's present defense force to 31,000.

However, some 250,000 trained men may be mobilized on short notice. The army's equipment is regarded as excellent.

Sweden's active navy consists of two cruisers and a small number of destroyers and auxiliary ships. Others are in reserve.

Her air force has well over 1000 modern planes, a large proportion of them jets.

Sweden has a trained general civil defense force of 400,000 men. A special civil defense group, made up mostly of women, brings this total up to 864,000.

Norway

NORWAY gives military training to 18,000 men yearly—the same number as in 1939. Since 1945, about 100,000 men have been trained. In addition, some 125,000 are organized in a home guard. These are mostly infantry and antiaircraft units.

Her navy has seven destroyers, five or six submarines and an undisclosed number of other small craft.

The air force has three wings of jet Vampire fighters and a similar number of Spitfires.

The civil defense program aims at an eventual total of 60,000, of whom 15,000 are to be women.

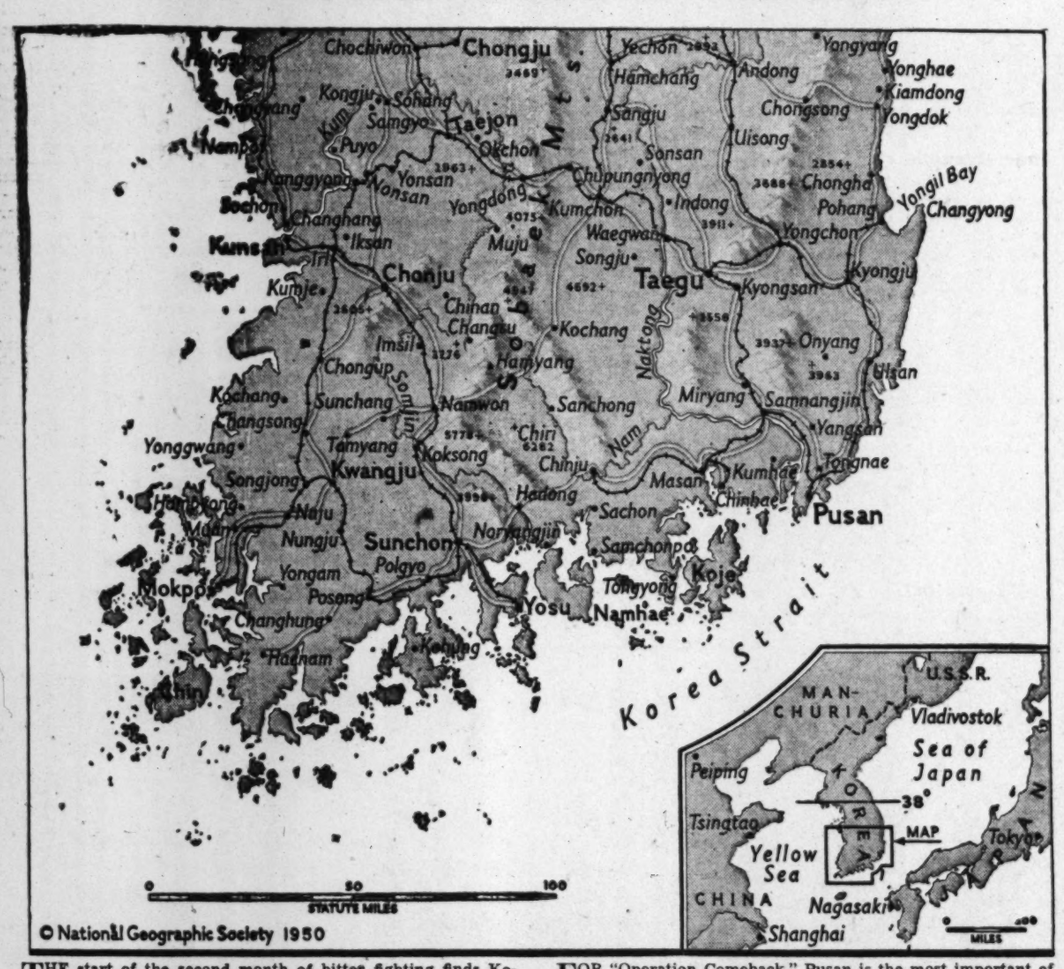
The Korean Zone of Decision



THE start of the second month of bitter fighting finds Korea's crucial zone of decision squeezed into a contracting area at the foot of the embattled Far Eastern peninsula.

The scope of the theater of immediate operations is graphically presented in a new map of the present cockpit for combat in Korea, which has just been especially prepared by the National Georgraphic Society.

This is the "pay dirt" territory for halting the unrelenting Communist offensive, for stabilizing the front, and then mounting the "Operation Comeback" so important to maintain United Nations prestige.

The up-to-the-minute National Geographic map, which takes in the two thirds of the Southern Korean Republic now making headlines, indicates some of the multiple military problems besetting the forces doggedly resisting aggression.

The area has only one good port, Pusan, but its capacity is limited. The railway system, except for a lone double-track line twisting northwestward from Pusan, was never meant to serve the enormous demands of modern warfare. So-called major highways, as the map shows, are woefully few, and not of the construction that can be expected to stand up long under the constant pounding of heavy motor transport.

Japanese Maps Confusing

CONSIDERABLE confusion has existed as to the extent of Southern Korea's rail and road net and this the new Geographic map seeks to clear up. During their occupation of the country up until VJ-Day, the Japanese depicted as realities on their Korean maps railroad lines and highways which did not exist beyond the planning or blueprint stage. Many maps available to the general public at the outbreak of the Korean conflict relied on the accuracy of these Japanese surveys and hence showed railroads yet to be built and road links on which construction had never been started.

Matching the lack of adequate communications, Southern Korean terrain is a factor that can call the turn on future military operations. Hilly, semimountainous and mountainous, the rugged nature of the country poses problems alike for the aggressor and defending forces.

The most dominant feature in the area is the Sobaek Mountain range which is pictorially represented near the center of the map like an inverted letter "Y." Military men agree that much may depend on which side is able to hold this natural barrier.

FOR "Operation Comeback," Pusan is the most important of the more than 125 place names appearing on the National Geographic's new map. On the tip of the southeastern coast, Pusan is Korea's No. 1 port, as well as the third largest city in the peninsula.

It is the only southern port that can handle heavy-draft cargo vessels or transports and it is the terminus of the strategic double-track railroad which connects with Taegu—now a communications junction of top importance. Communist forces have taken the major points along the line to the north—Taejon, Suwon and Seoul, the latter two cities in the area above the section covered by this present map.

Pohang, where the famed First Cavalry Division made its surprise amphibious landing, is a comparatively small port about 68 miles northeast of Pusan. Its shallow harbor is suitable only for fishing vessels and light craft. A long concrete seawall is the only wharf facility.

Mokpo, Yosu and Masan, south coast ports, have no deep water anchorages or facilities for the massive tonnage needed to build up a counteroffensive. Mokpo already is reported in Communist hands and this would make Yosu's position quite vulnerable.

Logistic Problems

THE scarcity of good ports available to defending forces is causing logistical headaches. Defense Department officials have pointed out that seven tons of equipment must be landed in Korea with each fighting man, plus a ton each month thereafter to keep him supplied. This does not include additional tonnages required for the buildup of reserve strength and material essential for mounting a major counteroffensive.

Practically everything used by American and South Korean troops must be shipped in. Fortunately, Pusan is only 135 miles across Korea Strait from the nearest Japanese port on the island of Honshu. American depots in Japan can be drawn on for some supplies, but the great bulk must come to Pusan from the United States across some 4500 miles of sea lanes.

Moving supplies from Pusan to the front is another vexatious problem. The main highways would not be considered secondary roads in the United States. Little of the mileage is hard surfaced. Monsoon rains, now in season, frequently wash out road sections and bridges. Rivers rise quickly with flash floods. As for the double-track railway line to Taegu, it has scores of tunnels and bridges and these are difficult to protect against sabotage.

Land Reform Our Best Bet in Asia

immediately the most important objective, both intrinsically and because of the threat of communism.

Technological improvements alone will fall short of our goals. Increased production must be accompanied by a fairer distribution of farm income. Improvements in the use of land can come about most effectively if the tiller knows that the land or a reasonable share of the product of the land will belong to him. Otherwise, not all prerequisites will exist for the technical progress envisioned, for instance, by the Point IV Program, and our political aims will be made more difficult of attaining.

Douglas MacArthur in Japan, Nehru in India and, more recently, Gen. Chen Cheng of Formosa, have understood the urgency of taking the wind out of the Communist sails in a peasant ocean. MacArthur knew how to do it and did it. A successful land reform under his direction has created in Japan a new, large class of private owner-cultivators, and has rendered rural Japan practically impervious to communism.

Nehru is trying hard to do it. India's needs for technical farm improvements are overwhelming, and Nehru is well aware of it. But he is just as conscious of the urgency for a concurrent land-reform program which will give the Indian peasant an incentive to improvement and a sense of responsibility.

Suggested farm reform can become a powerful political instrument. The native governments friendly to us would be more likely to win popular support, and popular support in Asia is "peasant support or nothing." An owner-cultivator, or a reasonably satisfied tenant, would acquire a stake in society. He would guard that society against extremism. Private property would be strengthened where it has been weakest, at the huge base of the social pyramid. The common man of Asia would become a staunch opponent of Communist economics and politics—not necessarily to favor the interests of the United States, but simply because his own interests lay in the same direction.

Climate Is Lacking

SECRETARY ACHESON summed up the causes of Asia's tensions in the San Francisco address on United States policy toward Asia. "They (the Asian people)," he said, "have been striving for independence, spread ownership of land and control over their own destiny." He continued, "it is no accident that their goals and our goals are the same." But while we are busy enriching the economic, political and social institutions the American people have already achieved, Asia is yet to create the beginnings from which a democratic society may evolve. Such conditions cannot be handed to Asia as a gift; they must grow out of Asia's wishes, opinions and activities.

Nor is this easy. For Asia, unlike Western and perhaps also Central Europe, lacks almost entirely the traditions, institutions, habits of thought and experiences which are essential to democracy. That indeed is the principal political and psychological reason why communism is a much greater threat in Asia than in Europe. The natural defenses against communism that a tradition of individual dignity, the rights of man and of democracy sets up, in different degrees in various countries, are yet to be created in Asia.

We are still to demonstrate in that part of the world that democracy is better and more profitable, too. And it is through helping to solve the problem closest to the heart of the peasant that such a demonstration can be made.

The need for United States material and technical assistance in Far Eastern programs of agricultural improvement is accepted as an integral part of our policy in Asia. The Point IV Program is a good example of that. Another instance in the same direction is the economic aid being rendered now to southeast Asia by ECA. Less widely accepted and often even unrecognized is the necessity to dissuade the recipients of our aid in Asia from allowing narrow institutional interests to stand in the way of a progressive rural policy, through which the maximum economic and political benefits of our technical and financial assistance could be realized.

We must make an effort to persuade the more conservative Asian groups that rural reform is essential to their own preservation, as well as in the interest of the peasantry.

The Common Man

SECRETARY ACHESON is addressing himself to the core of the problem when he urges that "We must increasingly in all we do and say affirm the positive goals of a free people." If Mr. Acheson's words are to carry meaning for the common man of Asia, we cannot remain indifferent to the dominance of the traditional beneficiaries of the prevailing feudal systems. From ambassadors and ministers to foreign service clerks, we must begin to feel and act in terms of the common man, and in Asia he is the peasant.

We must make a special effort to seek out and encourage in every way possible the native liberal groups who might otherwise be lost to our common cause. It is in the vast numbers of the cultivators of the soil and in the small yet important elements concerned with the welfare of the people where we would be well advised to find and win our most potent allies. A strong, fairly contented peasantry and progressive native forces supporting them provide a more solid base for cooperation with the West, and for the struggle against communism, than the forces at work in many parts of Asia, to whom the very words "reform," "change" and "concession" partake of the devil. They suffer from myopia, a disease likely to be fatal.

The landlords of Szechwan refused to support a mild reform program even though the Communist armies had already penetrated the gates. In the rest of Asia, too, landlords also may be their own gravediggers, and of their own governments.

In country after country one sees feudal classes bent on maintaining the status quo unsullied. They are the unwitting and unwilling allies of communism, for they are the creators of the revolutionary situation. It is these and such forces that today hold great and decisive power in Asia.

One of the basic tasks of United States representatives abroad should be to convince these groups and their governments to follow the example of Czar Alexander II, who saw in time that his only chance of keeping the throne was to initiate reform. He warned the Russian landowners a hundred years ago that "it was better to begin the abolition of serfdom from above than to wait for it to begin itself from below." He abolished it from above, and the Romanov dynasty retained the throne for another half century, until Alexander's less-wise grandson lost it.

Too Late in China

FORTUNATELY, we already have a technical and social agrarian program that has been developed and successfully tested by the Joint Commission on Rural Reconstruction (JCRR). This organization, created in China as part of ECA under authority provided in the China Aid Act of 1948, held its first meting in Nanking October 1, 1948. The work of JCRR came too late to alter the course of events in China itself. But what I saw of the JCRR's operation in China and in Formosa, where the operation is still going on, convinces me that it was one of America's most fruitful ventures. It points the way to what might be done on a larger scale, and in better time, elsewhere.

JCRR is not an American but a joint American-Chinese commission, with a Chinese chairman and two Chinese and two American members. We Americans furnish the money but do not call the tune. With nationalism in Asia at white heat, we must be careful not to do so.

The commission works through local organizations and finds local sponsors among them for its projects. These projects are not based on preconceived theoretical notions but on indications as to what the farmers themselves wish most. From such grass-root needs JCRR has evolved a practical National Plan with this order of priority: (a) land reform, (b) irrigation, (c) fertilizers, (d) farm organizations, (e) farm credit, (f) plant and animal disease, (g) seed multiplication, (h) animal breeding, (i) rural health and (j) audio-visual education.

The response of the Chinese and Formosan peasants to JCRR has been enthusiastic although the commission has actually spent little money—only five million dollars from its inception to date. It made more friends for the American cause and did more actual good than many an elaborate diplomatic act backed by the richest of treasure.

The Harder Job

MOST significant was the reform of the tenure system. 'Why," I asked Dr. Chiang Monlin, chairman of JCRR, "are you engaging in this work when the landlords are certain to oppose you?" "To give meaning to the nine other branches of our work," Dr. Chiang Mon-lin replied. "We know that using science to increase production is relatively easy, but solving social problems is difficult. If we had not developed a land-reform program along with our production program, the better part of the good results would have gone to the landlords and not the tenants. That would defeat our purpose."

JCRR did not create or impose agrarian reform upon China. Its Chinese chairman convinced the Nationalist government that rent reduction and land-purchase programs, which had already been on the statute books for more than two decades and never applied, should be given a trial, if only as enlightened self-interest.

Within the short space of a few months the land reform produced substantial and immediate results, in terms of greater security of tenure and more rice for the tenants. It is questionable if years of farm improvements would have given the tenants benefits anywhere near as great as these.

Armed Resistance

REMARKABLE also was the manner in which tenants asserted their new-found rights. This was impressed upon me as I watched the land commission of Yang Chia Tza village, in the province of Szechwan, as it considered an eviction case in the presence of landlord and tenant. Calmly and with deliberation, a tenant contended that under the reform he could not be evicted—something that would have been unthinkable a few years ago.

Or take the case of Gen. Lin Wen-hui, governor of Sikiang, one of Asia's largest landlords, chief purveyor of opium throughout southwest China, most recently in the service of the Communists. Reforms were not meant for him, he thought. He sent one of his estate managers with a detachment of troops to collect rents—the high, old rents. The tenants did something they had never done before—they armed themselves.

When the manager and the troops appeared, they announced that they intended to defend their rights under the new rent-reduction scheme and would not permit collection at the old rate. Whereupon the manager hastily agreed to accept payments at the reduced rates.

In the province of Szechwan alone, more than two million tenant families were direct beneficiaries of JCRR. Yet JCRR disbursed but $218,000 on a reform that went to the heart of China's rural and political problem.

Positive Action

THE reform came too late to give the Nationalist government even a measure of popular support. But our last-minute efforts in southwest China—and at present in Formosa—nevertheless carry with them a most important lesson. ECA through JCRR has demonstrated, in a practical way, that the United Sates can act not merely against communism, which has little meaning to the average Asian peasant, but also for certain ideas understood by the most ignorant of peasants.

It is true that a final solution of problems of the Asiatic peasant—final in the sense that most of them will live happily ever after—cannot be achieved. There is simply not enough land for the great multitude of farmers. But progressive rural reform in Asia is not a question of the whole loaf; any effort to ease the peasant's burden is welcome and lays a foundation for a middle-of-the-road, stable, rural society.

The tenant in the village office of Kwangsi, half-crazed with joy over the receipt of a deed that gave him ownership of but one acre of land, spoke for Asia's millions.

Maj. L'Enfant's Forgotten Grave

By T. Loftin Snell

ON THE back lawn of a large stone house atop a hill at the junction of Ager rd., Riggs rd. and East-West Highway, West Hyattsville, Md., is the first, and for 75 years the forgotten, burial site of Pierre L'Enfant, whose birthday will be celebrated here August 2 with the performance of the Berlioz "Requiem."

The spot, encircled by old cedars, is marked by a large wooden cross and a brick and concrete tomb erected in 1925 by Francis Riggs. On the top is inscribed in clerical Latin, hardly legible from many coats of whitewash, this legend:

"Here for many years lay the mortal remains of Pierre Charles L'Enfant, a military major, who died at this place June 14, 1825, thereafter exhumed and reburied with military honors in Arlington Cemetery April 28, 1909. R. I. P."

The estate has been known for at least 150 years as Green Hill, and originally belonged to the great 5400-acre Digges holdings called Chillum Castle Manor. It was here, in the home of William Dudley Digges, that L'Enfant spent his last three years, and died, a disillusioned and poverty-stricken old man, scorned and laughed at by the public.

Had he not been befriended by the Digges family, he would have spent his last days in the poorhouse. His entire estate at his death totaled $46.

A Washington Miniature

THE Digges frame house, where L'Enfant had a small room, no longer exists. It was torn down in 1868 by George Washington Riggs, one of the founders of the Riggs National Bank, who had bought the place. The present stone mansion (except for one wing) replaced it. The gardens L'Enfant laid out—some say they were a miniature of the Washington city plan—deteriorated, and in their place now are conventional formal gardens.

The roads, mere unnamed dirt lanes when L'Enfant walked them, are paved and overloaded with motor traffic. The once forested countryside has given way in the past few years to the Riggs Manor apartment development, large and small houses lining Ager rd., the Lewisdale housing development and acres of modern houses still under construction. The stone house and its grounds are owned by an order of the Catholic Church, the Congregation of the Resurrection, which bought it from the Riggs heirs in 1936.

All that is left that might serve as a reminder that L'Enfant once lived at Green Hill is four large groups of boxwood at the rear of the house, and some holly trees, all old enough to have been planted about the time of his stay there. The boxwood, believed to have been some part of the gardens L'Enfant laid out, is now five to six feet tall, massive and grown into grotesque shapes. One holly tree close by the grave is between 35 and 40 feet tall and more than two feet in diameter.

Fired a Second Time

L'ENFANT came to Green Hill in 1822. For seven years before, he had lived at Warburton by the generosity of its owner, Thomas Digges, an uncle of William Dudley Digges. Thomas had become well acquainted with L'Enfant during the major's work on Fort Washington, whose site was bought by the Government from the Warburton lands. Digges' bachelor home was directly across the river from Mount Vernon, and he was "Neighbor Digges" to George Washington. At times his boat and galley slaves were sent to ferry Washington across.

When, in 1816, after a year's work on the fort, L'Enfant's plans were rejected by the War Department and he was stripped of his colonel's commission and dismissed, Thomas Digges wrote him that he would be honored to have him as his guest as long as he wished to stay. This was the second time L'Enfant had been dismissed with censure from a Federal job.

His career, what was left of it, was finished, and his name was a laughing-stock. He was called "L'Enfant of the grandiose plans" and known as a "difficult and cantankerous character." But Thomas Digges, a rich and distinguished gentleman, disagreed with these criticisms. His feelings and observations about the major are preserved in the L'Enfant-Digges-Morgan letters in the Library of Congress.

Created a 'Commission'

THOMAS DIGGES died in 1822, and shortly afterward, Warburton House burned. L'Enfant, penniless and old, had no place to go except the poorhouse. The nephew of Thomas Digges offered him a home at Green Hill, and, to save his well-publicized pride, gave him an indefinite commission to lay out the grounds of the estate.

During the next three years, still erect and proud, he wandered about the countryside with one or more dogs at his heels. His clothes were shabby—he was easily spotted by the long blue coat which buttoned up around his neck, a garment he had worn at least 25 years.

In it he had roamed the halls of the Capitol from 1800 to 1810, buttonholing Congressmen and Senators to ask them to pass a bill paying him adequately for his past services. (He finally was voted about $2000, an amount he considered an insult, and a good part of which his creditors seized). The neighbors of the Diggeses knew him as "that tall, queer old man with the long nose who lives at Green Hill."

One Grave Abandoned

HE DIED when he was 70 and was buried in the Digges family graveyard on the back lawn. His grave may have been well kept during the ownership of the Digges family, but the Digges fortune did not survive the Civil War. The estate, which once encompassed the western part of Takoma Park, all of Rock Creek Cemetery, Brentwood, Mount Rainier, Cottage City and Colmar Manor, was broken up.

When G. W. Riggs bought Green Hill, members of the Digges family were removed from the old cemetery, but L'Enfant was left and the grave, unmarked, unmounded, in time was hidden by vines, brush and wild flowers, and forgotten.

In 1901, L'Enfant's city plan was chosen anew as the best to guide the development of the city, and a Senate committee directed that Washington be restored to the basic scheme. A new interest in the designer was awakened and a search was begun to piece together his story. The Digges records led to the grave under the cedars at Green Hill.

A public monument for the spot was proposed, but the owners of Green Hills, two elderly daughters of G. W. Riggs, objected. Eight years later, the bone fragments, uncovered from the exact directions of the Digges records, were reburied with military honors in front of Arlington House, after lying in state several hours in the rotunda of the Capitol. His tomb stands on the edge of a high hill, overlooking the city he designed and which caused him so much anger and heartache.

Traditionally Laggard Congress Out in Front

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

CONGRESS, which traditionally lags behind the President and the country, last week showed signs of stepping out ahead of both on all war-related issues.

Perhaps for the first time in history, it actually grabbed the lead in initiating emergency tax legislation, all the more remarkable since this is an election year.

At week's end, there were mounting indications the same thing could happen on "all out" controls, and even on military appropriations.

A majority in Congress, aroused as never before since Pearl Harbor, has plainly set out to reverse the psychology of "too little and too late."

Mr. Truman, who hitherto had to prod Congress sharply for everything he got, was being maneuvered into the position of applying the brakes. He had to warn in effect against "too much and too soon."

The unusual turnabout produced a curious mixture of statesmanship and politics. Most of the "all outers" are convinced they are in tune with the popular pulse; that the country would accept price controls and higher taxes without a murmur. Some don't give a hoot whether it's popular. Others resorted to the most confusing hedge possible. After assailing the President's limited control program as "dictatorial," they declared for the Baruch program of controls all the way.

Regardless of motivation, Congress is still out in front. This week may show whether it stays there. Having passed the two military manpower bills, its decisions on controls, taxes and appropriations should tell the story.

JCEC Steals the Show

THERE'S a yarn behind the story of the President's five billion dollar "interim" tax program. It's a story of how Congress, in at least this one instance, needled the President into action.

The story tells itself. Here's the chronology:

Right after the June 25 Korean invasion, the Senate Finance Committee shelved the Administration "balanced" tax bill. Projected excise tax cuts were washed up, but the men at the helm of the tax-making committees said January would be time enough to raise taxes. There was no sign that the Administration thought otherwise.

On July 17, two days before the President delivered his Korean war message, Administration spokesmen said no taxes would be in it.

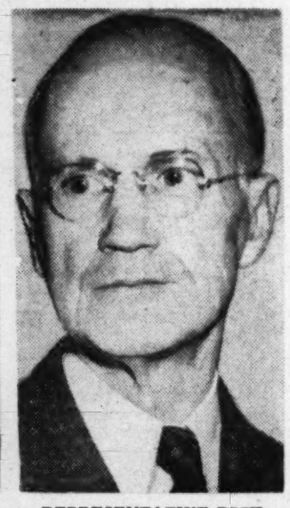
Then, the day before the message, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) circulated a memorandum prepared by his Joint Economic Committee staff. The memorandum advised taxes now to curb inflation and finance the war out of current revenues. A copy of the memo went to the President.

On July 19, Mr. Truman recommended "substantial" increases in taxes but didn't say "now" or even "when." He said at "an appropriate time." Lacking more definite word, Capitol taxmakers continued to say no action was probable until January.

But on July 21, Senator O'Mahoney called a meeting of his Joint Congressional Economic Committee. The group lacked any authority to legislate. All it could do was recommend.

It was a strangely mixed assemblage of four Democrats and five Republicans. At the head of the table sat Senator O'Mahoney, a leading Fair Dealer. At his right sat Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio), Mr. Truman's bitterest antagonist. Included in the GOP line-up was Representative Robert F. Rich (R., Pa.). For once, Rich didn't ask his celebrated question: "Where are you going to get the money?" He well might have. For this meeting had the answer.

SENATOR O'MAHONEY
. . . started ball rolling



REPRESENTATIVE RICH
. . . he didn't object

SENATOR WHERRY
. . . Escort

Unanimously, and with Taft just as insistent as O'Mahoney, the group urged "immediate" imposition of taxes on corporations and individuals to check soaring prices and to finance the war.

The White House needed no more. Advance release of the President's midyear economic report was held up for insertion of specific tax recommendations.

On July 24, Senator Walter F. George (D., Ga.) and Representative Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.), whose tax-making committees held the trumps, were invited "down to lunch" by Treasury Secretary John Snyder. They agreed to go along.

Next day the President's five-billion-dollar tax program was officially unveiled in a letter to Senator George.

When the President's economic report was released July 26 there was the same tax program, word for word. But the news was complete anticlimax. The joint congressional committee with the long name, that no one thought had any legislative powers, had come up with it first.

In fact, it had produced something better. In an election year, with a single press conference as its mouthpiece, it had "sold" a bipartisan tax program.

Return to Sender

THE fine art of voting two ways on the same question is as old as the political profession. Some Republicans are trying their hand at it in the current economic control fight. But never this session have so many been caught at it as on the Postoffice "one delivery" issue.

Months ago the Postmaster General directed the mail carriers to stop ringing twice, in anticipation of congressional cuts. The House nonetheless went right ahead with the cuts. The Taber-Thomas amendment, cutting the Postoffice Department along with other agencies a round 10 percent, was approved by a comfortable margin.

Then the squawks from postal employes and those on their routes started rolling in. The Postoffice cut became awfully unpopular.

Representative John R. Walsh (D., Ind.), who got postal workers their pay raise last year, promptly circulated a petition to force a vote on a bill rescinding the "one-a-day" mail delivery order.

Last week the petition was signed up, with the required 218 majority. The "ring twice" bill now will go to a showdown on August 14.

But more than half of the members who signed the petition will have a lot of explaining to do. By actual count, 119 of them voted previously for the Taber-Thomas cut.

Leaping the Dome

THE House invasion of the Senate, which started more years ago than anyone can remember, is continuing apace.

Harry Parker, late beloved messenger of the House Ways and Means Committee, used to lament this House yearning for senatorial togas.

Philosophized Harry: "Seems like they just take the cream of the House and make Senators out of 'em."

Last week, Representative Mike Monroney (D., Okla.) was practically assured of a Senate seat when he was nominated to succeed Senator Elmer Thomas.

Earlier, two other House members, Representatives George A. Smathers (D., Fla.) and Francis Case (R., S. Dak.), won Senate nominations tantamount to election.

By actual count, 26 present members of the Senate, more than a fourth of the august body, were House members once, among them the "Veep" and Senate Democratic Leader Scott Lucas.

In November an even larger number of House members may cross over.

Here are the others who would like to swap sides:

Representative Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.), running against Representative Richard M. Nixon (D., Calif.), for Senator Sheridan Downey's California seat.

Representative John Sanborn (R., Idaho), against Senator Henry C. Dworshak (R., Idaho).

Representative Compton I. White (D., Idaho), against Senator Glen H. Taylor (D., Idaho).

Representative John A. Carroll (D., Colo.), against Senator Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.).

Having Fine Time

SINCE legislators can't get home to see the voters, the voters are coming to see them. At least that's one explanation of the unprecedented throngs of visitors piling into the Capitol this month.

A better one is that Congress is suddenly vying with the beach resorts as a stellar vacation attraction.

One veteran Capitol guide estimated that 10,000 persons filed through the building on one busy day. Of that number, some 1300 asked for official guides. About 19 guides are kept busy leading them around the Capitol.

Most of the visitors want to see the House and Senate in action and docilely stand in long queues waiting for a gallery opening.

Harry C. Nash, assistant chief of Capitol guides, thinks the Korean war has something to do with the influx. Not only are the visitors thirsty for information, but some of them are taking a last fling at a vacation while gas is unrationed, says Nash. The guide also noted that a large percentage of the visitors are youths of draft age.

Sometimes, when large groups of constituents from their own State arrive, Senators and Representatives take over the guide role and show the home folks around. Last week, for example, 30 career ladies, mostly from Nebraska, had Senate Republican Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (Nebr.) for an escort.

Wherry fed them breakfast, then took them on a tour of points of interest. The Nebraska Republican finally led the ladies to the Senate Appropriations Committee room, where the armed forces' top brass was assembled for questioning on military needs.

Chairman Kenneth McKellar was about to call the meeting to order when Wherry burst through the door.

"Hold everything," said Wherry.

Then one by one the ladies filed in for a peek.

It was probably the most exclusive military inspection ever staged in reverse.

'M-Day Force' Still Mainly on Paper

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

CONTRARY to optimistic expectations of four years ago, the National Guard today is far from being the "M-Day force" intended by the Army.

An "M-Day force" is that part of the national military establishment trained, equipped and morally prepared to go into action on the first day of combat or as soon thereafter as called upon. Not only is the National Guard no such force; its units are far under strength, ill-trained, partly equipped and, most important of all, unprepared morally for the task which confronts it now.

In its plight may be found much of what ails the United States defense in South Korea. Granted that the weapons of this defense at first were inadequate to the task before it; granted that it was flung piecemeal into battle against a numerically superior enemy trained and equipped for precisely the military enterprise in which it was engaged. Therein lies only part of the story and the least important part at that.

Far Understrength

IN THE case of the National Guard, a force of 27 infantry, armored and airborne divisions, together with other types of units, was set up on paper, the whole to include 672,000 men. As it is, the ground elements of the Guard now number the originally proposed 27 divisions plus 20 infantry combat teams, but so understrength are they and their supporting elements that they count only a little more than 326,000 men instead of the projected 672,000.

In the years since 1946, the Army has revised its calculations respecting the Guard a number of times. It juggled its figures repeatedly in an effort to make them fit reality, and finally proposed that six Guard divisions instead of all 27 would be recruited, equipped and trained as an M-Day force. Then, in case of emergency, these six divisions could be thrown into the gap while their fellows were being made ready.

Now that the chips are down, the six divisions are not ready, let alone the original 27. The reason, unfortunately, has nothing at all to do with the demands of the military situation. The reason is politics.

No Hurt Feelings

THESE six Guard divisions cannot be called out ahead of the other 21 because they might object to "unfair" treatment. It seems not to matter that the country needs them; the deciding factor appears to lie in making certain that nobody gets a better or worse deal than anybody else.

Perhaps that is not an entirely just way of putting the situation. It might be better to say, which certainly is true, that the Army (or somebody higher up) is afraid the Guardsmen might object to this sort of preferential treatment, regardless of whether such a fear is justified. In either case, the ruling considered is not whether these men and their units are needed, but whether their feelings might be hurt.

Likewise, the troops now along the front in Korea are, for the most part, doing something for which they did not enlist and which they never expected to be called upon to do. They are living in scrawny foxholes, eating sparingly of K-rations, enduring all the hazards of weather and the enemy's fire. This is not what they were doing four weeks ago and it is not what they enlisted to do.

Although they were called soldiers, they were not soldiers and, in the true meaning of the word, had never expected to be soldiers. It is not a cause for wonder that they went into combat dazed and unhappy.

Their work had been that of policeman and administrators, not that of the soldier training for combat. There should be no surprise that they had to learn the hard way: on the battlefield where the only mark of failure is zero.

It is not these young men's fault that they were so ill prepared for their present ordeal. There were giants of courage among them, of course, as there are such giants among all sorts of men. But, in the average, they were just young Americans, from the cities and the farms of the richest Nation on earth, mad at nobody and unready for anger, their training and their equipment neglected because of a foolish optimism at home which carefully overlooked unpalatable reality.

The Fiber Is There

THE notion that these young men will not or cannot fight when need be is not the correct one. Americans, properly indoctrinated, trained and led, have always made soldiers second to none. These young men have had a false indoctrination throughout, their training and equipment have been neglected and their leadership is one with themselves.

The remedy for these things does not lie immediately at hand, because it must come from a people who themselves congenitally seek the easy way out until they find themselves in a corner from which escape is only by the toughest way of all. Before other young men are sent into battle now or later in the same state of moral and material unreadiness, an acceptance of the facts of life must come upon their people.

Korea should provide its own lesson: that soldiers in these times cannot be made overnight and that the long process of making soldiers is only delayed by catering to the natural desire for unearned rewards.

Now Kilroy's Over There

IS THE elusive, irrepressible Kilroy back again on active global duty?

According to a story from an American air base in Japan, this ubiquitous legendary veteran of World War II has again put in a word, if not his appearance, as Uncle Sam's Korea-bound fighters are departing for combat duty.

Taking up where he left off after defeat of the Axis, the Kilroy of today had the last laugh after a wall scribbler at the Japanese embarkation base claimed to be the first there. "Sorry to spoil your little joke," went Kilroy's latest rhyming riposte. "I was here, but my pencil broke."

How did the redoubtable Kilroy get his start? The explanations are almost as varied as tales of the mystery warrior's exploits. Some say the saga all began in the Air Transport Command of the United States Air Force.

A real Francis J. Kilroy, this version goes, had come down with influenza while stationed at a Florida airfield. On his improvement, a friend posted a bulletin-board notice, "Kilroy will be here next week," and the game was on.

Another Air Force version makes the first Kilroy a frequently missing enlisted man whose irate commanding officer was foiled in tracing him by the Kilroy-was-here, there and everywhere technique.

Congressional Immunity

The immunity from suits for slander enjoyed by members of the Senate and the House of Representatives when speaking in their respective chambers derives from Article I, Section 6, of the Constitution which provides that "for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place." This immunity is dictated by the public interest and is vital to the legislative process. As the Supreme Court observed in reference to it as long ago as 1808, "These privileges are granted not with the intention of protecting the members against prosecutions for their own benefit, but to support the rights of the people, by enabling their representatives to execute the functions of their office without fear of prosecutions, civil or criminal."

Now and then, however, the privilege is grossly abused. The most notorious case in point is the recent conduct of Senator McCarthy who used the protection of the Senate floor to make scurrilous accusations which he was not only unable to prove but for which he had no supporting evidence whatever even at the time he made them. Mr. McCarthy announced rather grandiloquently, it will be remembered, that he would never, never, never say anything in the Senate that he would not repeat outside it; but he has not seen fit to make good that boast.

The McCarthy abuse of senatorial immunity does not, of course, invalidate the immunity itself. Even though liable to abuse, it is too important to the work of Congress ever to be relinquished. But it may be possible for Congress to restrain abuse without impairing the privilege. The point is one which was raised by the Tydings Subcommittee in its report on the McCarthy charges. That report recommended a careful study of the subject of congressional immunity by a joint committee of the House and Senate. "It is believed," the subcommittee said, "that from such a study it may be possible to evolve legislation which is designed to preserve this immunity without prejudice to the historic and necessary reasons therefore and at the same time insure that it does not become a shield to perpetrate injustice and fraud." The subject deserves careful exploration. Some such restraint is needed to keep the privilege itself from falling into fatal disrepute.

Brazil's Friendship

The Export-Import Bank loan of 25 million dollars for the Volta Redonda steel plant in Brazil is more than an investment in steel. It is an investment in the continued friendship of this country's most consistent and loyal ally in the hemisphere. The loan is justified on its economic merits; but beyond that it also should serve to lift some of the bad feeling caused by the Gillette coffee report and the generous loan to Argentina.

There were, of course, several good reasons for the 125-million-dollar loan to the Argentine. What many Brazilians could not understand, however, is why the United States should give priority to aiding the Peron government, which had set many examples of bad neighborliness, while at the same time it dawdled over previously made Brazilian requests. The request for the Volta Redonda loan was before the Export-Import Bank for 15 months in one form or another; a second application for a loan of approximately 30 million dollars to the Brazilian state of Minas Geraes for agriculture and water development has been pending for nearly two years. It is thus understandable that the Brazilians began to feel that their close alliance with the United States in most matters of international policy—for instance, their expenditures in readying airfields for possible use in the Berlin airlift—was not appreciated. The gratuitous insults of the Gillette coffee report capped the climax. And the spread of anti-American feeling in Brazil has great significance respecting the presidential election this October, since Getulio Vargas, the ousted dictator, is plugging this line in seeking a comeback.

Friendship, of course, is much more than a matter of economic assistance. But the United States has a decided stake in the continuation of representative, constitutional government which Brazil has adhered to in the face of great difficulties. At least our friends in the hemisphere ought not to be given cause to feel that the United States is taking them for granted while going out of its way to court the holdouts.

Defense Of Washington

It would be strange if the impetus of civil defense preparations were required to bring about the decentralization of Washington which the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has long advocated. Yet the import of the "Plan for the Security of the Nation's Capital" prepared by the National Security Resources Board clearly runs in that direction. The NSRB would relocate essential Government agencies in "satellite" centers within a 50-mile radius of Washington, on the logical theory that thus not all of them could be wiped out in an attack. Nonessential agencies would replace those moved from the central city.

To carry out such a plan on any large or immediate scale, of course, would be fantastically expensive and would cause vast new problems, not the least of which would be highways. To be practical, the plan would have to be embarked upon gradually. Nor would it provide for those hapless workers who would be left behind, or for the great number of persons who would continue to maintain their residence in the District. In other words, this plan is aimed at the security of the Federal Government rather than at protection of Washington citizens.

By coincidence, the current issue of Collier's contains an article by John Lear entitled "Hiroshima, U. S. A." It describes in graphic and gory detail the probable effect of an atom bomb dropped on New York—and the same effect no doubt would apply in most major cities. It tells of the simple but effective preparations made in Britain and notes some of the major deficiencies in our own civil defense preparations. For example, there are not now enough bandages in the entire United States to meet the needs of one large atomized city; blood supplies are grossly inadequate; there is no agreement on standardized treatment, and doctors would be inhibited by State laws. Likewise it relates the premises upon which Britain has based her preparations: a dependable warning system and properly constructed shelters which give the best chance of survival.

Civil defense planning on the Federal level has been unpardonably slow. Only now, for instance, is a plan being readied for Washington as one of the pilot cities. But civil defense at last is getting into motion under NSRB direction. The danger of articles such as Mr. Lear's is that, by frightening people out of their wits, they will induce panicky demands that could paralyze sensible planning. If there was any obliviousness of the perils of atomic attack, the Korean aggression should have erased it. The need now is for Federal leadership to guide cities and States in preparations that must be essentially theirs—and for the Federal Government to fill in the gaps on such things as supplies. Most of all, the need is for adequate information so that the average citizen will understand what he can do to help.

D. C. Not Present

The fact that the District apparently will not be represented at the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth is not unique in Washington's experience with such matters, but it is humiliating. A group of 20 civic leaders appointed by the Commissioners had worked since last September on plans for the District's part in the forthcoming conference. They had even raised some $2125 in private contributions for staff assistance expenses. But the $5000 additional which they had sought from Congress was pared from the District budget in conference.

Although Congress wielded the knife, it does not deserve the major blame. It is one of the anomalies of the system under which Washington is governed that busy legislators who must act as a city council cannot take time to understand every item in the District budget. For this reason the District sometimes gets short shrift. But the extenuating circumstances that apply to Congress do not exonerate the District Commissioners. After asking a group of citizens to give extensively of their time, all the Commissioners could offer by way of support of the project was a letter to Congress stating that they had no objections to the appropriation. This negative attitude will stand as an unfortunate precedent for similar events in connection with which the Commissioners may need community help. In this case the members of the citizens' committee could scarcely avoid feeling that the Commissioners let them down.

Teachers' Declaration

The board of regents of the University of California has entangled itself in a new controversy by voting, 10 to 9, to retain 40 faculty members, including several full professors, who had refused to sign a non-Communist letter of contract. The action was taken on recommendation of President Sproul and the faculty committee on privilege and tenure but was vehemently resisted by John F. Neylan and other board members who felt that it was unfair to the 99 percent of the faculty who had signed the non-Communist declaration to retain others who refused to do so. To this Governor Warren replied that the committee investigating these cases had found no evidence that any of the 40 was a Communist and that in the absence of such evidence the board should support the president. His reasoning seems to us unassailable, and if this policy survives the next test in August it will have the effect of softening the non-Communist declaration requirement.

Six faculty members, one a full professor, have been dismissed after hearings because of their refusal to say whether or not they are Communists and their unwillingness to cooperate with the tenure committee. In these cases no questions are likely to be raised. The necessity of eliminating Communists and fellow travelers from teaching positions has been given new emphasis by recent events abroad. The Kremlin insists that not only party members but even signers of its fake "peace petition" are committed to sabotage, strikes and resistance to the policies the United States and the United Nations are now following. But cannot the schools and universities clean house without seeming to cast suspicion upon the vast majority of loyal teachers? The fact that the regents of the University of California have refused to make the objectionable non-Communist declaration conclusive suggests once more that better methods can be found.

GIs And Gooks

Correspondents in Korea, in dispatches recounting their interviews with harassed American soldiers, have disclosed that the habitual name applied by these troops to the inhabitants of the peninsula, whether of Red or of anti-Red persuasion, is "Gook." This appears to be a kind of generic term among the soldiers for the representatives of any culture that appears to them technologically backward. The etymology of the term is obscure; some have attempted to trace it to the Scots dialect word gowk, meaning a stupid fellow; others have derived it from a rather freakish animal which was one of the staple features of a cartoon comic strip drawn by the late Elzie Crisler Segar, which also included something called a jeep. "Gook" seems to have entered the GI vocabulary as a somewhat derisive term for the Arabs in North Africa and later to have been extended to the Melanesian and Polynesian islanders of the Pacific, and sometimes even to the Filipinos.

The revelation that it was being applied to the Koreans was joyfully pounced upon by the Communist Daily Worker. See, exclaimed the Worker, in effect, how these agents of Wall Street imperialism regard the colored races of the world. Now the cry has been taken up by the whole Communist propaganda apparatus, and evidently with considerable effect. A dispatch from Tokyo by Mr. Walter Sullivan to the New York Times says that the attitude of the American troops and their officers is fast losing us friends and costing us influence among the native Koreans. The attitude of the soldiers, as Mr. Sullivan admits, is natural enough in the circumstances. Among other things, it reflects

> . . . their resentment at having been sent into a fight they do not fully understand; their impatience at Korean inexperience with modern devices at a time when a military crisis demands speed; their mistrust of all Koreans because of their inability to distinguish friend from foe, especially near the front.

Mr. Sullivan thinks it highly important that they do learn to make the distinction, and so it is, of course. All the same, it is a difficult one to make under the circumstances, which include the practice of infiltration of American lines by Communist guerillas disguised as civilians. American troops are ordinarily subjected to "indoctrination," but apparently the process is not altogether efficient; for it is the testimony of a good many observers of the GIs in World War II that most of them had a rather hazy notion of what it was all about. Of course, it is asking a good deal of lads drawn from American factories and farms to have any understanding of Oriental culture or customs. But Americans engaged in a mission like this one in Korea do need to remember that they are participating in an international venture the final outcome of which will depend in very large measure upon the good will of the native people.

Marriage Strategy

Red China's new marriage law, recently ordered into effect by Mao Tse-tung, is a strategic step by the Communists to overcome their chief obstacle to permanent conquest—the old social order. That China always absorbs her conquerors has become an axiom. This is because of the strength of family institutions. To destroy this feudalistic order is a fundamental Communist aim, as only thereby can the revolution be made to stick.

The new law is based on monogamy, equal rights for both sexes, freedom of choice and legal protection for all parties, including mothers and children. Wives may work outside the home, retain their own names, inherit property, have equal rights to household possessions. Divorce will be granted on application if both parties desire it. Otherwise, the People's Courts will decide. But now the question is: How enforce the new law? The Chinese Communists do not have a trained judiciary. The new legislation may suffer the same fate of neglect as the advanced civil and penal codes the Chinese National government drew up in 1930 and 1931. Again the Chinese may fall back on their ancient local customs.

However, the measure has great propaganda value. By championing the equality of women, the Communists are drawing on a great pool of power. Many Chinese women are reported to have turned to communism because of resentment of the old family system, with its arranged marriages, domination by the husband's family, concubinage and other restrictions. Although during the last 20 years these conventions have been less common among urban and educated Chinese, they have retained their hold on the masses. Now by propaganda and discussion techniques, Chinese Communists are advancing their new marriage system among students, government personnel and industrial workers. Introducing the "new family thinking" to peasants may be more difficult, especially since the old system gave some security to the excess feminine population. But freedom in family life, or at least the promise of it, may have greater appeal.

Religion In Sweden

I was shocked by the surprising misstatements with regard to freedom of religion in Sweden which were made by Msgr. McCarthy in his letter published in this space on July 10. The facts, as I know them from my own experience in Sweden and which have also been corroborated by the Swedish Embassy here, are the following:

Freedom of religion is guaranteed by the Swedish constitution of 1809.

Neither the Swedish constitutional law concerning Parliament nor any statute prescribes the religious faith of members of Parliament, officers in the diplomatic service, or teachers in the public schools, except those teachers who conduct classes in religion. On the contrary, there are in all three branches of the public service above mentioned, officers of the Catholic faith, a fact of no little significance considering that the total Catholic citizen population numbers no more than about 5000 in a country of seven million people.

Moreover, it is characteristic of the broadly tolerant temper of Swedish society that differences of religious faith are not a matter of public discussion. At the present the only government officers who must be Lutherans are cabinet ministers, but even this qualification would be abolished by a proposal now under consideration by the government.

Monsignor McCarthy writes that "non-Lutheran churches are not legally able to hold property." The fact is that non-Lutheran denominational bodies legally hold property today valued at well above 100 million Swedish crowns (approximately 20 million dollars at the present rate of exchange.)

The collection of vital statistics of births, marriages, changes of residence, deaths, etc., has for centuries been a regular function of the local clergy. The pastors of the established church continue this function today and it is in fact a most reliable way of gathering these data. In this connection it should be borne in mind that the Lutheran church in Sweden is the state church and its ministers are government employes. Catholic churches since 1895 have, however, by special statute enjoyed the right to register births, baptisms, deaths and funerals of their communicants.

The publication of marriage bans for all persons is done through the established church, but the marriage ceremony can be performed in any church or before a civil officer, even though as a matter of census procedure there must be registration by an officer of the established church.

Defense Of Rhee

Recent press reports, columnist commentary and other publicity derogatory to President Syngman Rhee of Korea have been a source of much regret to me. Whenever anything happens anywhere that is not as we would like it, we are prone to criticize.

No doubt President Rhee has made some mistakes; unwise appointments, policies which proved ineffective, decisions lacking in wisdom. Where is the executive who has not made the same mistakes?

It was my privilege to serve, for six months in Korea, as the director of a teacher training project under the joint sponsorship of the American and Korean governments. In that capacity I came to know President Rhee quite well. I saw him at work. He was deeply interested in the task in which my associates and I were engaged. He delivered the commencement address at our closing exercises. He talked with me about the hopes he had for the Korean Republic and the problems to be solved. In all that he said and did, there was always evident a deep sense of personal modesty, sincere devotion to his country, and a courage not found in the conceited. He had vision not limited by expediency and faith which had stood the test of time and which embraces the trials, partial failures, and problems which inevitably will attend the future.

Russian Nature

It has been said that we do not understand the Russians. That is no doubt true; but the old harridan, Mrs. Gamp, in Charles Dickens' novel, Martin Chuzzlewit had something to say on the subject when she delivered herself of the following sentiment: "Some people may be Rooshans, and others may be Prooshans; they are born so and will please themselves. Them which is of other nature thinks different." W. P. L.

Atlantic Union In U. N.

Mr. Omar B. Ketchum's letter of July 14, states that the United Nations acted swiftly in the Korean crisis. The United States was the first and only country able to put ground equipment and men into the Korean crisis. This is proof that the slow turning wheels of the U. N. are too slow to stop a major invasion if one should ever come.

Mr. Ketchum talks as an authority for the Veterans of Foreign Wars, but I would like to point out that he doesn't represent the thoughts of all veterans. Several chapters of the Disabled American Veterans are supporting the Atlantic Union Resolution which calls upon the President of the United States to explore and report back to the American people what our possibilities are for an Atlantic Union and what our gains will be.

'I believe that the people of the United States know that Russia intends to bleed this country of our resources and manpower, and disrupt unity in the Western world. Examples are the Berlin airlift, China's civil war, the Korean invasion, and the marshaling of troops in the Balkans. What next?

In two world wars, other democracies have borne the heels of aggression before we were strong enough to do our part. Under the proposed Atlantic Union (within the United Nations) our unified army will create an unbalance of power which no nation will dare attack. As we stand now we are being picked off one by one.

"Indirect Lobbying"

A letter from Mr. W. C. Mullendore, president of the Southern California Edison Co., printed in your July 2 issue raises serious questions as to the competency of the House Lobbying Committee to investigate "indirect lobbying"—i.e., efforts to influence public opinion on public issues. These questions should not go unanswered.

Mr. Mullendore contends that an inquiry into the sources of funds used in indirect lobbying can be held only after government has been "empowered to determine what constitutes 'propaganda' to influence legislation." May I suggest that this is precisely the point of the present investigation; the Lobbying Committee, despite unconscionable harassment, is trying to determine to what extent the reporting requirements of the Regulation of Lobbying Act should encompass expenditures for indirect lobbying.

Mr. Mullendore is saying that the committee has no right to investigate "indirect lobbying" until this term has been defined, but he denies that the committee has the right to investigate in order to define it. To put it charitably, this is a bizarre conception of the proper scope of congressional investigatory authority.

Mr. Mullendore also writes that "'lobbying' has a fairly definite meaning," but that indirect lobbying "apparently covers the whole field of communications designed to influence opinion upon public matters." I can agree with Mr. Mullendore that "lobbying" has a fairly definite meaning; unfortunately, the meaning of "lobbying" in a dictionary sense has not been in accord with the realities of lobbying since at least 1910.

The only adequate gauges of modern lobbying are deliberate intent to influence public policy, a minimum of effort in this direction, and some expectation of success. These same criteria apply to indirect lobbying. Certainly they do not span the whole field of communications designed to influence opinion on public issues. They would not, for example, extend to the publication of books, regularly financed and distributed through customary commercial channels. But they do and should extend to those pamphlet-mills whose policy intent is clear, whose effort is continuous, and whose financing is unorthodox. To define lobbying to exclude these organizations is to have missed 50 years of lobbying progress.

Mr. Mullendore asserts that "the power to require an accounting in any such broad and indefinite field of communications between citizens, both in and out of public office, is a power to regulate, to burden, and to restrict the exercise of free speech and free press."

Here again, Mr. Mullendore has indicated an absence of full understanding of the subject.

The committee's power to require information germane to its investigation in no way restricts, regulates, or derogates any constitutional right whatsoever. Mr. Mullendore is free to contact his Congressmen six times a day, or to hire a lobbyist to do it if he so chooses. He can disseminate whatever information he desires, to whomever he likes, subject only to the laws of libel or slander.

The committee asks only that he stand up and be counted, that he identify himself and his activities to those whose thinking he has sought to mold. He or anyone else has a right to lobby however he sees fit, but sound public policy equally calls for a full disclosure of what he is up to and from whom he derives support.

How anyone can object to a procedure of such simple honesty is beyond my understanding.

Representative from Pennsylvania, Chairman, House Select Committee to Investigate Lobbying Activities.

The Time For Self-Discipline

By Andre Visson

Struggle for Survival

COMMUNIST aggression in Korea has finally closed the chapter of complacency and illusions with which so many people here and in Europe have lived since the surrender of Japan.

For many people this chapter ended the day the Communists staged their coup in Czechoslovakia. But it is in human nature to reject the grim realities of life until one finds himself confronted with them and there is no way back. Many well-meaning people had hoped against hope that in some way or other things would straighten out.

The guns from Soviet-made tanks rolling across Korea gave us the last warning that things do not straighten out by themselves. It will be up to us to straighten them out—if it can still be done. But in order to be able to do this, we must have the courage to face the grim realities of our time. At worst, we will have an all-out war on a global scale. At best, we will have a decade of considerable hardship.

We have entered a struggle for survival. We are convinced that we will win it. But we must realize that it is going to be a long and hard fight.

IN THIS struggle into which we have been forced by expanding communism, we must avoid two equally dangerous philosophies: One, is "business as usual." The other, is defeat the foe by using his own weapons.

No "business as usual" will be possible in a country devoting over half of its national budget to defense and in addition spending billions of dollars for strengthening its allies all over the globe. On the other hand, it would be disastrous if we were to succumb to rigid economic planning, which is one of the roads leading to totalitarianism, and one of its main features.

To be sure, our free enterprise economy is less well fitted than the controlled Soviet economy for the struggle in which we find ourselves engaged. But the free enterprise system is the economic expression of our political beliefs, and the source of our military strength. We will have to adjust our economy to the conditions imposed on us by the struggle for survival. But it would be an empty victory if we were to win the struggle and lose forever our economic freedom.

The Soviet system thrives on planning—and breeds it. In the days of Lenin, economic planning gradually took over, one after another, most of the economic fields in the Soviet Union. But it was Stalin who placed the entire Soviet economy under the yoke of state planning.

In 1928 he launched his first five-year plan, which was to be "compulsory for the managing bodies and to determine the economic development of the whole country." Since then the Soviet Union has been living under a totally planned regime. The key planners have been in a position at any moment, at Stalin's orders, to switch the country's production from one level to the other. Any morning they could decide the proportion of "guns" to "butter."

WE CAN DO this only in wartime. The first national wartime plan in the non-Communist world was applied in Germany. It was in 1916, when the so-called "Hindenburg Plan" tried to apportion the entire output and consumption of a nation. Two years later, in May, 1918, the United States tried its hand at wartime economic planning. A war Industries Board was set up with a Division of Planning and Statistics. But its functions ended with the Armistice of November, 1918. The general feeling was that in peacetime the board would do more harm than good.

The same feeling toward state controls and planning prevailed during the Second World War. The overwhelming majority of Americans welcomed the liquidation of the OPA, of the War Production Board, and of other Government agencies engaged in controls and planning.

They were accepted as a wartime necessity, but rejected as a nuisance in peacetime. Today, when we must devote an increasing part of our production to our national defense, the great test for American democracy is to accomplish it with as little planning and controls as possible. This is not easy to achieve, but it can be done if we impose upon ourselves the necessary discipline. Consumers must resist the urge to hoard. Manufacturers and tradesmen must resist the temptation to profiteer.

Should we fail, we will have price controls, rationing and the whole gamut of Government curbs. There are too many people in Washington who see in planning and Government controls the cure-all for present and future economic problems. The only way to prevent them from using this cure-all, which smacks of the very totalitarian system we are fighting, is to develop self-discipline.

"Puerto Rican Progress"

I wish to express my appreciation for your fine editorial of July 11 entitled "Puerto Rican Progress."

Obviously, the writer of this editorial had a firm grasp of the principles involved in the bill which President Truman recently signed, authorizing a constitutional government for Puerto Rico.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Housing Curb Hits Veteran Morale

By Drew Pearson

THE REAL estate lobby has issued a confidential letter to its members expressing satisfaction over President Truman's recent order curbing credit on housing. In fact, it looks as if the real estate lobby might have been responsible for pulling the backstage wires by which the White House chiefly cracked down on homes for veterans.

But, while he pleased the real estate boys, the President has struck a vital blow against home-front morale.

For at a time when we are asking new recruits for Korea, it is an ironical fact that we have not yet fulfilled our promises of homes to the GIs who fought in the recent war. One of the chief things they looked forward to when they got out of the foxholes was a home of their own. The President's order, however, will make this difficult of fulfillment.

Here is what the White House credit curb does:

1. Lowcost public housing projects are reduced by 25 percent. This hits the veterans hardest, because they compose the great majority of those wanting public housing. It took years for Congress to pass this law—over the vigorous objection of the real estate lobby—and now the President has played into the hands of the lobby by reducing funds for carrying out the law.

2. Private builders and mortgagers are given a green light to boost prices and interest rates—until such time as Congress grants the Administration control powers.

3. Veterans' loans at low interest for the buying of homes are curtailed.

The Lobby Is Pleased

NO WONDER the real estate lobby is gleeful. It is quite understandable, also, why Thomas P. Coogan, president of the National Association of Home Builders, last week wrote to members:

"I am here in Washington collaborating with Frank Cortright in the preparation of these extremely important letters."

Then, giving a hint as to how Mr. Truman happened to issue his crackdown on veterans and low-cost housing, the real estate letter continued:

"When it became known that President Truman was preparing a message to Congress on the Korean situation, I immediately came to Washington and we have spent the past 10 days in a series of conferences with many Government officials and industry leaders . . .

"President Truman has moved rapidly to request certain limited controls on the national economy . . . After study we believe that these new regulations have been carefully thought out as to their effect on the housing industry."

Veterans Get Slapped

PIOUSLY, the White House contends that "veterans' preference" on home building and financing will not be affected by the new regulations. However, "veterans' preference" means nothing if there is no money available to borrow. And the President creates that condition by directing that mortgage purchases by the Federal National Mortgage Association must be "held to the irreducible minimum."

FNMA, familiarly known as "Fanny May," is the Federal agency that acts as a secondary market in buying up mortgages on GI homes after the banks have overextended credit.

Mr. Truman's "irreducible minimum" of this secondary market means that private lenders will have virtually no place to dispose of surplus GI mortgages—and a stoppage of home loans to veterans is bound to follow. The mortgage bankers never have liked the low 4 percent interest rate on the Government-guaranteed GI loans, anyhow, and are happy the President is giving them an opportunity to make no more.

Housing experts generally agree that the stabbing of "Fanny May," plus another move by the President requiring veterans to make a down payment of at least 5 percent on homes purchased with GI loans, will shut out millions of low-income vets who are still clamoring for homes in the $7000 to $10,000 class.

However, the President and his advisers are not stopping there. Mr. Truman also has asked Congress for authority to do away with the GI loan program entirely if he deems it in the war interest.

Note—Mr. Truman's top housing adviser—and the man credited with inspiring the crackdown on homes for veterans—is Ray Foley, boss of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

New Tanks for Korea

ARMY experts are now holding closed-door conferences with Cadillac and Chrysler engineers about mass production of T-41, the new and highly secret light tank developed in the Army's own plant in Detroit.

The T-41 is a 28-ton job, speed 35 miles per hour, armed with a 76-mm. gun to penetrate 11 inches of steel plate—the armor measurement of Russian tanks used in Korea. The 28-ton model is much smaller than the giant 60-ton Russian tanks, but is supposed to make up for this by its superior quality. The Army also has developed the T-42, a medium tank, and the T-43, a heavy.

All these new tanks are supposed to equal anything the Russians have got. Unfortunately, we have only a few experimental models.

Note—The United States produced about 88,000 tanks during the last war, now have only about 8200—and many of these need reconditioning.

The cost of producing the T-41 is about $100,000 each—about seven times what it cost to produce a comparable light tank in the last war. The Army had already allocated 45 million dollars to produce the T-41 even before the Korean crisis.

Pajamas and Top Hat

PAUL HOFFMAN, administrator of the Marshall Plan and manufacturer of Studebaker automobiles, not only has done a good job in Europe but has a sense of humor.

The other day his assistant, Tyler Wood, came to see him. Wood has just been appointed special representative in Europe with the rank of ambassador, and when he came to call on his chief, it happened that Hoffman was sick in bed with a minor ailment.

Hoffman, however, insisted on getting out of bed to visit with his assistant, and appeared on the stairs clad in dignified tail coat with high silk hat. Under the tail coat was a pair of flaming red pajamas decorated with tropical flowers.

"I trust," said Hoffman to his assistant, "that this is the proper costume in which to receive an ambassador."

Our Political Economy

Breach in the Dike

By Ysabel Rennie

AS wholesale and retail prices—the fever chart of the economy—reflect a rapidly growing inflation, the Administration has decided to press for higher income taxes this year.

Even in Congress, men of such divergent views as Wyoming's Senator O'Mahoney and Ohio's Taft agree on an immediate stiffening of the tax structure to put the arms program on a pay-as-you-go basis. O'Mahoney wants an excess profits tax accompanied by price controls. Taft thinks a 10 per cent tax rise will withdraw enough consumer purchasing power to make direct controls unnecessary.

Although Treasury Secretary John Snyder says no excess profits tax is contemplated for this year, and excise taxes should merely be held to present levels, he wants an immediate hike in income taxes. If a new bill is put off until next session, its first effects will not be felt before March, and this will be too late to prevent runaway prices.

The present discussion raises two important points. What kind of taxes are most anti-inflationary? And can taxes by themselves do the whole job?

Whatever interim measures are taken right now, our harried legislators will soon have to consider all possible sources of revenue. They will also have to face the unpalatable fact that if we want to curb consumer demand, taxes on the upper income brackets will not be enough.

This is because so much of the rich man's income is saved or spent on nonessentials. For every dollar a poor man is taxed, his consumption will be cut by one dollar. But a dollar taxed out of the upper income brackets may withdraw only 90 cents from the spending stream.

A Variety Needed

HAVING faced this unpleasant truth, let us consider specific tax proposals and see whether they would help curb inflation.

Taxes on corporations and excess profits—Yes, and for an indirect reason. High company profits are a goad to higher wage demands. If unions are not to set off the old wage-price spiral, business profits must be kept to a decent level.

Income taxes—Yes, if properly done. For reasons of public morale, the wealthy will have to carry the heaviest proportional burden, but unless all brackets bear a heavy increase, the tax will not be an effective weapon against inflation.

Sales and excise taxes—Very effective in cutting down demand. Excise taxes have the added advantage that they can cut demand exactly where it needs to be cut—on items needed in the rearmament program. The drawback to both taxes is that, imposed in wartime, they are hard to lift in peace.

In short, we need not just one kind of tax, but several kinds.

The Stumbling Block

THIS brings us to the issue raised by Senator Taft. Assuming we pay the whole arms bill in taxes, is he right in thinking we can avoid direct controls?

The answer, unfortunately, is no. There is a mountainous stumbling block to this simple solution: our 256 billion dollar debt.

We tend to forget that this debt is not only a Government obligation, but the savings of our people. There is nearly 100 billion dollars' worth of bonds in the hands of individuals and corporations.

This is a major inflationary danger, whatever we do to current incomes. These securities can be cashed on demand at the nearest bank or Treasury office. To make fiscal controls do the job in 1950, we should not only have to cut consumer incomes but freeze savings as well. Otherwise there may be a headlong flight from cash and bonds to goods of every kind.

Canny Investors

AMERICANS today are wise in the ways of inflation. This will make the Treasury's job doubly hard. Not only will it be difficult to sell bonds on a voluntary basis; it will be just as hard to keep people from cashing in what they have and flooding the market with their demands.

There would be one effective deterrent to this. Since the beginning of the last war, the Federal Reserve has been supporting the price of government securities. It could let the prices drop. But this is the solution least likely to be tried; for if the price of old bonds were to plummet, it would be impossible to sell new issues at par.

Senator Taft is right in urging immediate taxes. But in thinking this will hold the price line, he has forgotten the Federal debt. This is today's major problem in the fight against inflation, and one which economists have not yet begun to face.

A French View

Grave Words Were Spoken So Simply

The following is a translation of an article published in Le Figaro of Paris July 22. It is reprinted to show the "other side" of French thought, as differentiated from that of the "neutralists."

By Francois Mauriac

EVERYTHING has been said about President Truman's message, except perhaps that never have such grave words been spoken so simply. We have been impressed by the simple tone and by its text, the historical importance of which defies any comparison.

President Truman has understood that he had no need of convincing anybody. Totalitarian aggression, whether it be that of Hitler, of Mussolini or of Stalin—there is no man of our lifetime who has not suffered from it in his own flesh and mind, who does not know its prodromes, its torturous ways, its outbursts, its bloody consequences. Anybody else but the American President may perhaps have given in to the demon of eloquence. I admire the fact that the Chief of one of the strongest empires of the world should say to the other: "You shall not go further," without raising his voice.

We shall now have to wait for the effects and envisage them all. There is, however, one (of these effects) which will be a happy one, and that depends on us and only on us. What would without doubt not have been achieved by great phrases full of wind, this message so sober and so grave will achieve perhaps: it will awaken France and, through her, Europe. Our apathy has sometimes seemed that of an old goat hypnotized by a python. Will the old goat move at last? . . .

It is the intellectuals, and among them the best informed de omni re scibili et quibusdam aliis, who have caressed the idea of a neutral France and a neutral Europe in the world of Stalin, devourer of small nations, while they know that in the case of a brusque attack the French troops would be pushed around at the same time as the Anglo-Saxon armies, and while they know that the British Empire would enter the conflict at the first second and, consequently, the coasts of the Northern Sea and of the Atlantic would be the main objective to hold for both adversaries.

And, finally, it is again intellectuals among the members of Parliament whom the thunderclap of Korea did not cause even to turn their heads, so busy were they with their personal and petty affairs. If we kept quiet at that moment, it is because indignation and mockery had been surpassed; it is because we had the feeling that it was a matter of the complicated game of a certain breed of animals subjected to the laws of their own species, as though no celestial power would have been capable of stopping these mosquitoes from hovering over this open abyss.

No cry, even the most pathetic, may have awakened us out of this slumber, but this message whispered in a half voice will awaken us; these simple words of President Truman, the most simple that have ever changed the course of human history.

Matter of Fact

How Can We Meet Atom Attack?

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IN THE opinion of those best qualified to judge, a general war in the near future is improbable. But no sensible man can doubt that a general war is now possible. In case of war with the Soviet Union, it is only rational to assume that atomic attacks would be attempted against this country. This is an unpleasant subject, but nothing could be more stupid than to treat it as taboo. And it is now time to ask how well this country is prepared to deal with such attacks.

One Air Force general who has been close to the subject for a long time remarked that "the continental United States is about as ready as Hawaii was on December 6, 1941." Much has been written about the inadequacy of civilian defense. But all the discussion of civilian defense serves merely to obscure the obvious fact that civilian defense can only be a palliative—"like treating cancer with aspirin," acording to one gloomy authority.

The job of defending the continental United States against atomic attack is of course essentially a military job. And what deeply disturbs the general quoted above, and others who have been close to the problem, is the simple fact that the military forces of the United States are simply not organized to do this job.

Research and development, particularly have been allowed to lag, and the funds needed for an effective radar net were not requested even in President Truman's 10-billion-dollar program. But it was the lack of an efficient command organization, rather than lack of equipment, which brought disaster at Pearl Harbor. And American military forces in this country are still organized for the traditional war of the past—a war fought exclusively on foreign soil.

Under Single Command

THUS the only organized theaters are those outside the United States, in Europe, the Far East, Alaska, the Carribean. These theaters are commanded by a single commander (like MacArthur in the Far East). This commander has authority over all the forces in his area, air, sea and ground, and he can use them as he sees fit to accomplish missions assigned to him by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. In brief, the forces in these theaters, however inadequately manned or equipped they may be, are organized for war.

The forces in the United States, by contrast, are organized as though an attack on the United States were unimagineable. The Army field forces are organized into six armies in six distinct areas. The Continental Air Command is organized into four air forces, in four entirely different areas. And the Navy is organized into nine naval districts, in still another nine areas. These continental forces are separately commanded by the three Joint Chiefs—there is no overall command, since Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, has no command authority.

Imagine an atomic attack on this country under this system of organization. All three services would immediately be involved in the most complicated and overlapping operations, in order to deal with the attack.

The effort required would be as great and as complex as that in a major theater in wartime. Yet who would command this great effort? The Joint Chiefs of Staff could not do so—this is simply not their function. The President would presumably appoint an over-all commander of the American theater. But under present circumstances he would assume his duties under the worst possible conditions.

Jealousy at Fault

ALL this was clearly recognized three years ago when former Secretary of Defense James Forrestal ordered studies looking toward the organization of an American theater, under a single commander. The project soon died of a familiar disease—interservice jealousy. But that was in the days when the United States still enjoyed its atomic monopoly. Those days are gone forever. So is the time when we could afford petty squabbles about what service should supply the American theater commander.

Fortunately there are those, particularly in the newly organized Joint Secretaries, who are fully aware of the urgency of the problem. Obviously, the sooner this awareness is translated into action, the better.

Jap Experts Cautious on Korea

of their lives to that country) were cautious.

As some of Japan's one-time generals, with whom I have talked, see it, time is crucially important. The views of the best-informed Japanese on Korean prospects may be summarized thusly:

"A general war is unlikely if American military operations develop swiftly and successfully. If the military situation is not resolved by the end of the year, and bogs down through a winter, then hostile feelings will mount, increasing the possibility of the conflict spreading. Should military operations continue beyond 12 months, then there would be an odds-on chance of another world war by 1952."

The same experts thought the Korean timetable might shape up as follows:

"One month to mount a United States counteroffensive and get it rolling—this first month representing the critical period. Once an offensive begins, an estimated two further months to roll the Communists back across the thirty-eighth parallel, followed by another three months to clean up guerilla bands in the southern areas, making six months in all. This estimate assumes no serious American setback such as would delay the timing of the counterthrust."

Economic Ties

INFORMED Japanese point out that North Korea's economy is tied up with the Siberian economy much more closely than were Korea and Manchuria under the Japanese. Should, during the coming weeks, the industries and communications of North Korea be seriously devastated by aerial attacks, it would therefore represent a serious blow to the economy of the Soviet Union.

In one important respect, events in Korea have already affected popular thinking in Japan.

These last days there has been less talk about the beauties of neutrality, while talk about the possibility of the United States pulling out of the far western Pacific in any emergency has virtually ceased.

Japanese peasants, confronted with pictures in the newspapers of pitiful streams of Korean peasants driven from their farms by war, are beginning dimly to suspect that maybe neutrality would prove neither as easy nor as safe a proposition as they had fondly imagined. Japan's city-dwellers, despite some nervousness, are on available evidence prepared to admit—increasing numbers of them—that what happened in Korea could happen here if the Americans went home, leaving an anti-Communist Japan on its own. Some of the politicians who previously opposed the granting of permanent military bases to the United States are saying privately that it was well that American troops and jet-fighters were on hand to act promptly in the Korean crisis.

An Editorial View

SAID Tokyo's Jiji Shimpo editorially, "We must call the attention of the people to the fact that it is the American expedition to Korea which is keeping Japan safe from approaching danger. The Korean war has demonstrated that arguments favoring permanent neutrality for Japan do not hold water. We should also reflect that the United States could extend quick and adequate aid to South Korea because she had military bases in Japan.

"Japan owes to the United States her present security in the face of an acute danger of aggression. Had the United States hesitated to come to the rescue of South Korea with her military power, other United Nations countries would have hesitated to clarify their stands. And the United States could take the quick decision because she had General MacArthur's army in Japan.

"The developments unfolding in Korea clearly demonstrate that permanent neutrality is no means to guarantee security for Japan. It can be guaranteed only by Japan's cooperation with a trustable big power in the form of offering part of her territory as military bases."

Fear of Atomic Bomb

BUT ON one point the Suzuki-Sans of Tokyo and Osaka are still unrealistic. The fear—almost a phobia—that in the event of a general war, the Russians would reserve most of their atom bombs for Japan's once-blasted cities, runs deep.

It is useless to point out that if the present Communist tactics of "war short of world war" changed, and a world-wide conflict were launched, there would be more tempting targets for that country's limited supply of atom bombs than the wood-and-paper homes of Japan.

The Suzuki-Sans have had it once, and that fact colors all their thinking. They are prepared to believe that General MacArthur, a respurceful tactical commander who outmaneuvered and outguessed the best military brains of Japan, will just as surely outmaneuver the North Koreans and whoever may be advising them. They readily admit that the United States can be relied upon so to scourge the North Korean aggressors, once United States firepower gets fully to work on the Communist forces, that any other potential aggressor in Asia will think three times before agreeing to become Russia's catspaw. They are even prepared to agree that the Kremlin probably got the shock of its life when 48 nations lined up behind the United Nations in an unprecedented peacetime demonstration of unity and purpose. But they remain pessimistically convinced that if and when a new Armageddon occurs, Tokyo and Osaka and Nagoya will be "priority" targets for atom bombs.

And so the winter bedding is flowing out of Japan's cities into the safety of the countryside—in case.

District Affairs

D. C. Feeling Impact of War in Korea

By Harry N. Stull

THE IMPACT of the Korean war is being felt by residents of the District. A visit to the grocery store reveals higher prices on many goods, and also the fact that there are among us some who normally bought 5 pounds of sugar who now purchase in lots of 25 pounds—in other words, plain hoarding, which in this instance is wholly unnecessary and always unpatriotic. The law of supply and demand is inexorable, and when the demand is greatly increased there is bound to be a lesser supply and consequently higher prices. Even worse, instances have been cited where persons have purchased large supplies of necessary commodities with the idea of holding them until there is a scarcity and then selling at an exorbitant price.

STULL

The civic organizations, now in summer recess, will have much to consider when they reconvene. Experience in the last war indicated a growing necessity on the part of neighborhoods to bind themselves together in the common interest. Less attention was then paid to the familiar pleas for stop signs and traffic lights and more to civil protection. That war resulted in a great upsurge in civic consciousness.

Transit Fares

AN OFFICIAL of the Capital Transit Co., in testifying before the Interstate Commerce Commission, stated that the fare increase recently granted by our Public Utilities Commission was inadequate, and implied that another request for increased fare would be necessary. This is rather an amazing statement coming at a time when the returns from the operation of new rates have not been determined. This official and other transit company officers seem to indicate that their own estimated return on the new rates is completely accurate. The fact is that these same officials predicted a falling off in the sale of passes under the increased fare. The first figures available, however, show an increased sale of passes.

Numbers of Taxis

A HOUSE subcommittee (in this case consisting of one man) has been receiving testimony on the bill to restrict the number of taxicabs in the District. The bill would not affect the right of any present licensed driver, but is designed to limit the number that may be hereafter issued. It was testified that there are 8000 licenses now in use in this city, which is proportionately higher than the number in any other city in the country.

Although taxicabs constitute a public utility and are a necessary element in a city's transportation, there must be a point where the issuance of licenses stops. Such a restriction is necessary, not only from the standpoint of the pleasure car driver, but as an element in the elimination of part-time drivers, particularly those who work at other jobs and compete with regular driver when the opportunity offers. If the sky is to remain the limit in the issuance of taxi licenses, the men who devote full time to this work will not be able to obtain a livable income.

District Funds

FOR THE first time in the history of this city, a District appropriation bill has become law without a determination of the amount to be paid by the Federal Government. At this writing the amount is in disagreement between the two houses, and will be determined later as a part of the omnibus appropriations bill. There seems to be little virtue in this method of procedure, particularly so when we enter into a fiscal year without knowing the funds available for that year.

Fairfax Folk Asked to Write a Book

By Benjamin Muse

THE numerous civic organizations of Fairfax County are pondering a curious document. It is a questionnaire received from a body known as the "Commission to Study County Government," which was set up by the Board of Supervisors a few months ago and provided with a $5000 appropriation.

MUSE

If its questionnaire is to be taken at face value, the Commission to Study County Government has passed a considerable part of its job over to the civic organizations of that county. It is not merely canvassing the views of those groups. This might be an appropriate part of its research task (although, as it happens, a vastly clearer expression of the views of the people of Fairfax County will be registered in a referendum on the county manager plan next November.) But the commission is going to the civic organizations for a mass of factual and statistical information on the operation of county government elsewhere, and even for opinions on the constitutionality of statutes and interpretations of provisions of law!

Instead of compiling data and distributing it among the citizens of the county, the commission is doing the reverse: it is asking groups of citizens for the information.

The Sky's the Limit

THE MAGNITUDE of the task thrust upon the sundry clubs, leagues and societies of the county is staggering. Instead of the one question which will be asked of the voters in November (Do you want the county manager plan?), the commission asks 55 questions. The commission has thoughtfully suggested that replies be limited to 200 words per question (although "more extensive answers" may be made, if accompanied by resumes), but the civic organizations may go on and deal with points not covered by the 55 questions, if they so desire.

If a civic organization should attempt to answer the questionnaire in a thorough-going manner, it would find itself writing a book comparable, in size at least, to the Bureau of Public Administration's "County Government in Virginia." It would not be illogical if each civic organization should ask for an appropriation of $5000 with which to finance the undertaking.

What is even more striking, however, is the apparent aversion of the authors of the questionnaire to the form of government which so many of the county's citizens are now advocating. Although there is a generous use of the words "for" and "against," many of the questions are essentially rhetorical. Considerations calculated to disturb the supporters of the county manager plan are brought forward repeatedly in the form of questions. More than once, in fact, the commission appears to be putting the county manager plan advocates on the witness stand and submitting them to cross-examination.

An unbriefed reader of the lengthy questionnaire might gain either of two impressions: (a) that any course would be preferable to the adoption forthwith of the county manager plan, or (b) that county government is far too complex a matter for ordinary voters to tamper with.

Some Stiff Competition

THE SETTING up of a commission of 21 local citizens to tackle this voluminous subject was an ambitious undertaking in the first place. Comprehensive studies of county government have been made in this State in the past by the New York Bureau of Municipal Research, the Virginia Commission on County Government (1932-1940) and the State Chamber of Commerce, and the matter is under more or less continuous study by the Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Virginia. It may be added that the General Assembly made a very thorough study before making the county manager form of government available, and that it also has the problem under more or less continuous study in one form or another. The Fairfax County commission hardly has the facilities or the trained personnel to compete with these agencies.

Fairfax, however, is in the midst of a county manager plan campaign, and the Fairfax Board of Supervisors is generally believed to be opposed to the proposed change. The fact, therefore, that the more professional studies which have been made hitherto—almost with unanimity—have led to conclusions favorable to the county manager idea, may have suggested the need for a fresh and home-produced report on the subject.

At any rate, the questionnaire has strengthened a widely held belief that the operation of this extraordinary commission amounts to, not a job of objective research, but an obstructionist gesture on the part of opponents of the county manager plan.

Mahoney Virtues Are of Necessity

By James P. Connolly

WHATEVER else might be said of George P. Mahoney's campaign for the Democratic nomination for Governor, his independence can't be denied. He has no platform and no issue sharp enough to "cut any ice," and during the week it was decided that he will have no ticket. He could hardly be more independent if he were not running.

CONNOLLY

Stating that he intends to train all his fire on Governor Lane, Mahoney's high command is making a virtue of the lack of a ticket—a virtue of necessity. The bushes were beaten thoroughly for running mates, but if any were found they were running away. If the opposition were less solid or the Mahoney bandwagon more so, the woods would be full of running mates.

Mahoney is making a virtue also of his freedom from bossism, another virtue of necessity since the bosses were courted but not won.

Strangely, however, for one who boasts of his independence, the decision to have no ticket was neither made nor announced by Mahoney, himself. Rather it was made for him by a committee of 10 Mahoney "key" leaders who went into a huddle and the outcome was reported by the spokesman and presumably the master "key," H. Streett Baldwin. Since Baldwin is a former leader of Baltimore County, attempting a comeback, it appeared that Mahoney was being said by a former boss.

It appeared further that the independent is not against former bosses but only against active practitioners. A forgiving nature, no doubt. It recalls the old story of the man who was "not against unions but was against the CIO," which the CIO translated freely as meaning he was "not against unions, just good unions."

Plenty of Timber

GETTING back to the campaign, there are enough qualified aides close to Mahoney to make up a ticket—Baldwin, for instance, an able administrator and a "natural" for Comptroller. Finances are his forte. There also are several successful lawyers, one at least, who was interested four years ago in a chance of becoming Attorney General.

If these gentlemen are not receptive to places on the Mahoney slate, it is not surprising that others are not. A reasonable conclusion is that they do not find the slate's chances encouraging.

As for a campaign issue definite enough to merit the name, the sales tax might be a ready-made one if Mahoney would only say whether he is for it or against it. Governor Lane put him squarely on the spot during the week, challenging him to say whether he would pledge himself to work for repeal of the tax and what he would put in place of it. But so far Mahoney has only nibbled at the tax around the edges.

The main pledges he has made are for "economy" and "improvement," two large, vague abstractions that, under the circumstances, are contradictory, and the independent candidate has flashed no magic formula for reconciling them.

Scuttlebutt awhile ago was that he planned to promise a reduction in the budget, dropping either the sales tax or the income tax but leaving the choice up to the voters. The trouble with the choice is that the voters have no way of expressing it. Other acts of the Legislature are subject to popular referendum but appropriation measures are not, and the sales tax has been construed as such. Anyone planning to offer a public choice between taxes had better read Article XVI of the Constitution first.

The only way for a public declaration on the sales tax is for the candidates to declare flatly for or against it, as Lane has done.

The Sooner the Better

SWITCHING subjects slightly, some of the concern shown at the special session of the Legislature Thursday for persons who want to register seemed oversolicitous—the Buffington bill, providing several extra registration days and advancing the date of the primary to September 5 instead of moving it back to September 18.

The big word here is "advance." There was conjecture that the purpose of advocating an advance in the date, rather than a postponement, was political, the theory being that the Mahoney candidacy is at its peak now while the Lane campaign is gaining, so—the sooner the primary the better for Mahoney.

Former Mayor McKeldin entered the Republican gubernatorial primay during the week—late, as usual—and will have headquarters at the Southern Hotel. The Mahoney group plans to open headquarters tomorrow in the Lord Baltimore Hotel. The Mahoney people planned originally to move to the Southern, but they found that McKeldin had been there before them.

Late as he was in getting his feet wet, the former Mayor must have had it in mind to get in the swim all along. His campaign book matches, being distributed now, are leftovers saved from his last campaign. A hoarder.

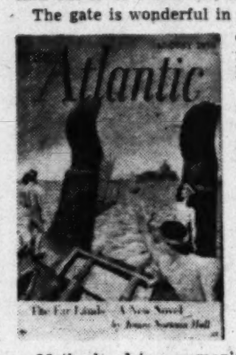
NIGHT BASEBALL GAMES are packing them in all over the country, but a lot of the baseball boys are afraid the boon may turn out to be a disaster, says Edwin O'Connor in the Atlantic.

The gate is wonderful in the cooler night, when day workers can come with their families. Witness the fact that more than a third of major league games are after dark this season.



But the quality of the game is slipping under the glaring lights, the author quotes some savvy baseball men. The bright lights handicap everyone but the pitcher, who profits from the batter's poorer vision. And the players themselves complain that it's hard to keep in physical trim with the night-owl up-at-noon schedules forced on them by evening games, he says.

"What modern woman has to recapture is the wisdom that just being a woman is her central task and her greatest honor," says Agnes E. Meyer, also in the Atlantic.

Motherhood is a woman's only vocation—if not in actuality, then in motherhood-substitute areas such as teaching, social work and medicine, the author argues in "Women Aren't Men."

The balanced modern woman has dropped the cry for equal rights, and seeks not parity, but partnership with men, says Mrs. Meyer. She believes women should realize and accept their vital moral role in helping remedy the disastrous isolation of the individual today.

Delicious Planktonburgers, Maybe

Sea 'Pastures' Might Feed Man

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

SCIENTISTS are getting ready now to drool over mysterious "pastures" of seafood, the meadows of miscroscopic fodder on which all sea life depends.

Their quest is in research on plankton, the invisible plants and animals which are bread and meat to most fish life.

The sea-going expedition is being sponsored by the National Geographic Society in cooperation with the University of Miami.

The work (scientists and commercial fishers call fishing work) is to be conducted on a year-round basis in the Atlantic between Florida and the Bahamas.

The sponsors expect the research will make important contributions to marine biology, develop data of general value to fisheries in the Caribbean-Gulf of Mexico area, and yield new information on the behaviors of the Gulf Stream and its effects on Europe and North America.

Aboard the research ship Megalopa, Dr. Hilary B. Moore prepares the seining gear that will scoop up plankton, while an assistant, Everett C. Jones, holds the bomb-like bathythermograph which measures ocean depth and temperature

Those Planktonburgers!

IT MIGHT even open the tap to a new source of food supply, and someday bring forth new delicacies like planktonburgers. A plankton sandwich, scientists at the University of Miami, say, might taste like bread filled with salty shrimp paste.

It would be quite palatable and nourishing, they add, without a shudder.

Dr. F. G. Walton Smith, head of the Marine Laboratory of the University of Miami, has been named director of the long-range research program. His associate director is Dr. Hilary B. Moore, also an oceanographer.

The project proposes microscopic scrutiny of the sea plants and creatures which, under much magnification, present themselves as a weird assortment of shapes and delicate coloring. An ever-changing, surrealist menagerie, so to speak.

Plankton is one of those things the Greeks had a word for—Plankton. Its derivation is "wandering," which describes the drifting life of these minute organisms incapable of swimming against tide or current.

A single quart of seawater, the scientists say, may contain as many as 100,000 phytoplanktons and zooplanktons. The former is the plant form. The latter is the animal form which lives off the plant form and itself. Yes, zooplanktons are cannibalistic to other zooplanktons.

Both Food for Fish

BOTH classes provide forage for sea life, from the smallest of the fishes to whales who build up to a 70-ton maturity in a few years on plankton diet. The stuff you and I might see only hazily if at all is to sea life what grasses and cereals are to animals which range the land.

When plankton pastures dwindle, the fish become fewer; when the pastures are lush, the fish teem.

Where plankton becomes too lush it seems to turn to a poison, and fish die. Remember the "red tides" of Florida which cast up dead fish by the odorous skillions?

Such tides, scientists say, may be a riotous development of plankton. So riotous that the usually invisible organisms so crowd each other they color the sea containing them, and poison it as well.

Of course, one reason why you and I don't see these plankton "pastures" is that they exist beyond the breakers. And they exist deep down, about 300 to 600 feet down by night, and 1200 to 1800 feet down during daylight.

Migration a Question

THE scientists, for one thing, are interested in how the tiny creatures know when the sun begins to rise, and why it makes any difference to them with so much water already overhead.

They'd also like to know how the plankton meadows materialize, and why they migrate from time to time, taking the fish with them. Then, too, they'd like to know if the migrations have any relation to climate changes.

Science discovered plankton almost a century ago, but the subject has been virtually unstudied since. Oh, there have been many studies on patchy pastures inshore, but those in the open ocean have been subjected to only random samplings.

Plans call for the University of Miami's research ship, "Megalopa," to ply its plankton course for regular seinings. They expect to "drag" the ocean water to a depth of about 2400 feet with closely woven nettings.

And as they "fish," they'll make systematic observations of the water, its light conditions, temperature and other factors. The bathythermograph, a temperature taker in the shape of a bomb, will be lowered regularly to keep the ocean's fever chart at predetermined depth levels.

And along with all their scientific devices, the scientists involved are expected to take along some of the paraphernalia they'd use at Chain Bridge or Hains Point, their favorite rods and reels.

A hooked shrimp or even a slice of bacon should look appetizing to a fish who wants to wrap his mouth around something more substantial than plankton soup.

N. N. Problem Child Still Welcome time of the Iranian crisis, he came back without questioning the legality of the Council's action.

If the Russians raise the legal issue, the non-Soviet countries can cite the Charter, which specifies that the Security Council must be so organized as to function continuously. An argument along these lines would waste the Council's time, but otherwise would get the Russians nowhere.

Without question, the Russians will pose as the great peace-loving nation, and they can try to confuse the issue by calling for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korean soil. But the answer to this one will be easy: the Russians were asked to intercede with North Korea to call off the war, but they never lifted a finger.

The Russians might win a propaganda advantage, but little else, from asking the Security Council to hear a representative of the North Koreans. Marshal Stalin hinted at such an attempt; he wrote to Prime Minister Nehru of India that a representative of "the Korean people" should be heard at Lake Success.

If the Council agreed to give such a hearing, it would simply furnish a propaganda platform for the Communist fairy story of South Korean and American "aggression." If the Council refused, Russia and Communist China might make propaganda capital in Asia and elsewhere out of the refusal—but propaganda would be their only advantage.

Formosa an Opening

A MUCH more promising opening, from the Soviet standpoint, would be an attempt to bring the Formosa issue before the U. N. For President Truman's decision of June 27 to use the Seventh Fleet, and thus to deny Formosa to the Chinese Communists, was not popular among many U. N. delegates and their governments.

It was a decision that had no U. N. authority behind it. It might not have won majority approval if it had been submitted to the Security Council.

It was especially unpopular in India, which regards itself as Communist China's best friend in the non-Soviet world, and which pointedly dissociated itself from what the President had done. It aroused the wrath of Communist China, whose leaders misunderstood it and talked of "American aggression" and annexationist aims.

Even the delegate of Nationalist China at Lake Success delivered a mild protest to the Security Council, declaring that Formosa was rightfully a part of China.

The Soviet delegate can try to have the Nationalist unseated and the Communist Chinese seated instead, but he must know that the odds are against him. There is little prospect, if any, of a majority of the Council agreeing to these steps while the Korean war goes on, and before the North Koreans have withdrawn to the thirty-eighth parallel.

Later, the admission of Communist China is probable and inevitable; it probably would have taken place by now if the Communists had not launched their invasion in Korea. Even now the United States does not intend to use its veto, for, as Secretary Acheson and other officials have said repeatedly, it does not regard membership as a vetoable question.

Welcome Mat Out

THE Russians can obstruct and make trouble in many minor ways if that is their intention.

Certainly the U. N. will not be the happy family it has shown itself to be since the Russians walked out. The problem child of the family is coming back, and with him will come all the old tensions and frustrations that caused millions to despair of the U. N.'s future only a few months ago.

But the United States is on record as wanting the Russians to come back. Last March, when the boycott was already two months old, Secretary Acheson made a speech in California in which he appealed to the Russians to play a constructive role in the U. N. He predicted that they would have a majority with them if they made genuine proposals "conducive to the role of peace" and respectful of the independence of other governments.

"We will rejoice to see them in such a majority," he said. "We will be pleased to be a member of it ourselves."

Later, at a press conference, he said he would like to see the Soviet delegate return in spite of Soviet obstructiveness in the past. It will be awkward and troublesome in many ways to have the Soviet delegate back while the Korean war is going on, but, on balance, many American officials and foreign ambassadors think it is by no means a disaster.

A Happier Sequel

WHAT happens in the Security Council next month will be less important than holding the military bridgehead in Korea, enlisting the support of the non-Soviet nations of Asia, keeping Communist China out of the war and making every conceivable political and military effort to prevent a new aggression somewhere else.

The Security Council, under a Soviet chairman, is bound to be a divided and frustrated body. But the non-Soviet world is fortunate that the Assembly is scheduled to meet in mid-September, for a session that may last until Christmas.

The Assembly, at least, cannot be thwarted by Soviet vetoes or blocked by Soviet obstruction. It was the Assembly that sent to Korea a U. N. commission which reported and registered the fact of North Korean aggression.

Even if the Security Council is deadlocked in the coming month, the whole free world can still make itself heard, and can find ways to make its voice effective, when the Assembly meets a few weeks from now.

'Special Kind of Graciousness'

Following are excerpts from a speech delivered in Urdu by Prime Minister Liquat Ali Khan of Pakistan following his return to that country after a tour of the United States and Canada.

AMERICA is a very large country. Only traveling in the interior can one learn the differences in civilization between the Eastern and Western States of America; and the Southern States are unlike the rest. These differences are not fundamental, but have real importance.

People from all the nations of Europe have settled in America, and they all have taken part in developing the country. This intermixture has resulted in a special kind of graciousness.

Our opponents had spread many wrong notions about Pakistan in America. Especially had they given a ridiculous and fearful shape to Islamic nationalism and the Islamic view of life. The people of America were told that we were bigots and were trying to form a society which would be dominated by narrow-mindedness and oppression, in which education would be limited to a few religious books and in which civilization would gradually diminish. When we described to these people the principles of Islam, they were astonished and pleased.

We also made clear to the people of Canada and America that minorities in Pakistan have as many rights as the majority. The protection of minority rights was especially discussed and stressed in the agreement signed by me and the Prime Minister of India before my departure to America.

The second wrong notion which has been spread in America about Pakistan was that Pakistan women are very low in society and have no rights. We told them that the reality is quite the opposite. Islam was the first religion in the world which gave proper rights to woman. The woman of Pakistan enjoys the same rights as in any advanced country in the world of today.

Besides this, the women of Pakistan have worked no less than the men for achieving Pakistan. Women of Pakistan today are taking part in every field of life. Not only do they have the right of voting, but they are members of the central and provincial legislatures, and they are playing their part very successfully. The people of America were pleased and amazed to learn this.

The secret of America's greatness is her industrial development. This is true also of Canada, which will be one of the richest countries of the world in the near future. God has blessed the two countries with all kinds of wealth.

Education and industriousness are necessary to get benefit out of natural wealth. It is very wonderful how those people are interested in getting education and how hard they work. Their love for their countries is also notable and to be emulated.

God has also blessed Pakistan with all kinds of wealth. Our aim should be to make our country equal to those. We should not compare our country with second rate countries.

To make Pakistan happy and prosperous, peace is very necessary. We also want peace in the world. We are very sorry to see war has broken out in Korea. One cannot deny that North Korea intentionally invaded South Korea. Under the circumstances, any peace-loving person cannot help sympathizing with South Korea. One cannot tell how this war will result or when it will end. It is very sad that today, when Asia is in dire need of peace, peace is in great danger.

Pakistan has supported the resolution of the Security Council in its position as a member of the U. N. organization. It seems to me proper to explain why we did so.

The U. N. organization was formed with the aim to settle disputes arising among nations now and then, by peaceful means. This could only be done if every member of this organization supported decisions made by the organization. And every member should try to make the organization so strong that no power would dare hesitate to follow its decisions.

At present, if the members do not support the decision of the Security Council, the existence or nonexistence of the organization will be inconsequential and all the work so far done for it will go in vain. Pakistan has supported the resolution for the sake of the world peace. That was the only decision for Pakistan to adopt; none other.

On behalf of the Begum Sahiba and the government and people of Pakistan and myself, I once again thank the people and governments of America and Canada, and assure them of our sincere friendship, and we pray for their prosperity.

'Master at Lying'

Lattimore Answers McCarthy

By Alfred Friendly

ORDEAL BY SLANDER. By Owen Lattimore. Little, Brown. 236 pp. $2.75.

OWEN LATTIMORE is speaking for the public at large as well as for himself when he writes, in reference to the period at the beginning of Senator McCarthy's attacks on him:

"I had yet to learn that McCarthy is a master not only of the big lie but of the middle-sized lie and the little ball-bearing lie that rolls around and around and helps the wheels of the lie machinery to turn over."

The fact that Lattimore was obliged to write a book of more than 200 pages to set the record straight is in itself a wry tribute to the Wisconsin Senator's mastery of the big, middle-sized and the little ball-bearing lie.

"Ordeal by Slander" is a simply-written, coldly angry marshalling of one charge after the other,

MR. AND MRS. OWEN LATTIMORE
. . . straight chronicling of their reactions

and one answer after the other. The reader's reaction to it will depend on his temperament. Either he will finish in a towering, frustrated rage at the attack on Lattimore; or he will be breathless with incredulity that a United States Senator could have done it and gotten away with it throughout a large body of public opinion.

Even to someone who, like this reporter, covered each day of ordeal for three weary months, the recapitulation and organization of the story into one compact bulk carry a renewed and powerful wallop. And to someone who followed the story only catch-as-catch-can from the press—even from one of the dozen American papers that devoted as much as two or three columns a day to it—the presentation of the story in all its enormity comes like a sledge-hammer between the eyes.

Actually, even in a whole book, written by a professional, the Johns Hopkins professor was unable to get all of McCarthy's misstatements set down, much less answered. Lattimore points out that in one of McCarthy's many speeches there were "96 lies—not wrong opinions but actual misstatements of fact."

Chronicle of Events

"ORDEAL BY SLANDER" is for the most part a straight chronicling of events, beginning with the author's actions and reactions, and those of his wife, when McCarthy started with the charge that the Far East expert had a "pro-Communist record" and then upped the ante to making him "the top Soviet espionage agent in the United States."

The facts about these charges are such that in writing the story, Lattimore never has to give himself the best of the argument; res ipsa loquitur. Only once does he slip. The testimony before the Senate investigating subcommittee of Brig. Gen. Elliott R. Thorpe in Lattimore's behalf was not, as he writes, impressive or convincing. On the contrary, it made a bad impression.

The book ends by being much more than a mere chronicle. Concisely, although passionately and powerfully, Lattimore addresses himself to what he considers the real threat of which his case is only one illustration.

"A tide of fear . . . is undermining the freedom of the Nation. We cannot turn that tide just by vindicating each individual who has been falsely accused; we must reestablish the freedom to inquire and the freedom to express opinions based on individual inquiry. These two freedoms are the flesh and the spirit of our political and intellectual freedom. Unless they are recognized by more than lip service; unless we can enjoy them in practice, the rights of the citizen are doomed . . .

"When the presentation of unpalatable knowledge becomes dangerous to the individual, the state itself is endangered."

Larger Aspects

LATTIMORE goes on to pay his thoughtful respects to some other larger aspects raised by his case: the role of the former Communist in present day America as the only source and oracle for the good, the true, and the beautiful; the outmoded conventions of the press which, in a case like this, virtually force an utterly distorted picture on the reader; the technique of congressional investigation; the lauding of the Russian technique of polemics in which every speaker or writer, regardless of his subject, must denounce the enemy and extol the homeland as a matter of form—which is then mistaken for substance.

An unfortunate omission is Lattimore's failure to relate his ordeal to Republican political tactics in an election year. Without drawing such a connection, a writer of the McCarthy story cannot make it entirely comprehensible.

Lattimore's book would also have been improved by the addition of a normal dose of humility. Modesty is not exactly one of his prominent virtues. But to this complaint, one may quickly answer that Lattimore feels he has reason to be proud, of what he has done and what he is, and that, at all times, he can look any other man in the eyes. That was more than McCarthy was able to do to him at the hearing.

A Nation Biding Its Time

Faces Etched in Hatred Mirror Germany's Mood

By John Barkham

GERMAN FACES. By Ann Stringer and Henry Ries. Sloane. 115 pp. $3.

MANY solid books on defeated Germany have been published since the war. Soldiers, sociologists, educators, politicians—these and others have told us at length what is wrong with the Germans, what they are thinking and what should be done about them. But it is safe to say that this slim volume of photographs does more to explain the mind and mood of postwar Germany than all the millions of words that have been published. These pictures mirror with pitiless truth the face of a nation that was once great, then humbled, and now bides its time.

Look at the bitter set of the jaw in young Heinz Helmuth, who says sullenly: "You Americans think you can get everything for a cigarette and a bar of chocolate. Sure, I was in the Hitler Youth, and now the Russians let us form a youth organization of our own. That's what German youth needs—not your Coca-Cola and candy."

Or one-legged Karl Volter, peddling nails between the Western and Russian zones: "One thing I've learned these years: be sorry for nobody! No sympathy. I'm out for myself and I hate all the rest of them." Or, most illuminating of all, Karl Knoebl, a staunch Bavarian parish priest: "The so-called victorious nations who pass themselves off as liberators only want to crush us so that we cannot rise again. They talk about guilt and punishment, but I ask: 'What have we done?' "

Each of these revealing faces is etched with its hatred and resentment, more noticeable in the depressing absence of hope. The accompanying text is brief and to the point, but it does no more than put into words what is written on these German faces for all to see. Look at them—and ponder.

Bonny Bobbie Burns

THE WONDER OF ALL THE GAY WORLD. By James Barke. Macmillan. 671 pp. $3.50.

THIS massive installment is the third in Mr. Barke's four-volume fictional life of Robert Burns. It is pleasing to report that the author's staying powers are equal to his task, and that his monumental job of research has not weighed down the impetus of his narrative.

Of the three novels so far published, this is easily the most spirited. Burns is now (1786-88) at the height of his powers as a poet and of his prowess as a lover. Edinburgh is a queen of capitals—gay, carefree, and a seat of cultural attraction. The poet in Burns luxuriated in the intellectual atmosphere; the man in him reveled in the lovely women whose favors he shared. We leave him as he turns his back on the city to return to Ayr and to Jeannie Armour, "the lassie I lo'e best."

The reader may be pardoned for wondering whether Burns, or any man who ever lived, for that matter, rates a 3000-page biography. Be that as it may, Mr. Barke propels his poet onward with a great deal of skill.

Passions of Youth

TWO ADOLESCENTS. By Alberto Moravia. Farrar, Straus. 268 pp. $2.75.

ALBERTO MORAVIA is one of the group of young novelists who have brought Italian literature to a new flowering. The two novellas in this volume, while not the equal of last year's memorable "Woman of Rome," will nevertheless add to the weight of his reputation in this country.

Each of these stories is a study of youth in that difficult period of transition between boyhood and manhood. Since sex is the yardstick in these matters, Moravia has given us two boys newly conscious of their masculinity—Agostino, who is not able to attain fulfillment, and Luca, who is. Each episode is handled with the utmost delicacy, as the author probes desires, thoughts, motivations. His pace, indeed, errs on the side of leisureliness, but it should be remembered that these are not tales of passion, but tales of vision.

Moravia has been well served in the translation. Although the two stories were done by different hands, there is a remarkable continuity of style, a tribute to writer and translators alike.

Ethan Allen Boy

THE ARCH OF STARS. By Clifford Lindsey Alderman. Appleton-Century-Crofts. 410 pp. $3.

MR. ALDERMAN has written a historical novel that is more than history. That is not to say that he plays fast and loose with the facts. On the contrary, there is evidence here of dilligent scholarship, but the author wears his research lightly. He has, in fact, subordinated his history to his story.

The period is the 1770s, when revolution was in the air. Our hero, Jared French, had no real issue with the British or the Tories, but joined the struggle to protect his New Hampshire land. Next thing he knew he was one of Ethan Allen's Mountain Boys. From here the tale moves at a steady clip through the war. Allen emerged as a high-spirited almost riotous, leader, but the two women Mr. Alderman uses for his romantic element are more conventional types—Arabella, rich, lovely and unscrupulous; and Ruth, poor, lovely and scrupulous. Naturally, it is Ruth who gets her man.

It will be apparent that "The Arch of Stars" is neither an ambitious nor an original first novel. But it is a workmanlike job, with a believable story and credible characters, and it does no havoc to history. Which is something to be thankful for.

The World of Ice

THE SURVIVORS. By Hammond Innes. Harper. 276 pp. $2.75.

THERE aren't many undiscovered places left where man hasn't crowded in with his guns and trucks and cameras, but the Antarctic is one, and to this day it has resisted all attempts to strip it of its mystery and danger. Mr. Innes is a smart, fast-paced writer of adventures, whose formula is the can't-miss one of weaving an exciting story into an unfamiliar setting. His "Survivors," set in the Antarctic, is his best effort to date in the John Buchan genre.

The story opens dramatically enough with the news flashed to London that a large whaling ship has been caught in an ice pack. Several icebergs are also charging into it, and the ship is fast being crushed into matchwood. With his stage thus set, Mr. Innes takes a group of survivors across the ice, and after a hair-raising trek brings them out safely. Not content with the theme of man against Nature, he includes a killer in the group and further hypos the story with a couple of gorgeous women.

An essential requirement of this type of story is that it shall seem credible. Mr. Innes appears to have a working familiarity with the white wasteland, and his characters are all acceptable people. But his great asset is his narrative skill and quality of suspense. In short, a rattling good yarn perfectly tailored for midsummer reading.

'Ever Affectionately Yours'

Kindlier Study of Jane Carlyle

JANE WELSH CARLYLE, A New Selection of Her Letters. Arranged by Trudy Bliss. Macmillan. 355 pp. Ill. $3.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S wife has so often been represented as a self-willed, querulous, sharp-tongued woman that a sympathetic portrait of her is refreshing, however exact it may be—Trudy Bliss in her foreword saying somewhat contradictorily that no selection of letters can "ever be impersonal; but every honest arrangement should be impartial."

The question of the precise shading of the portrait of Jane Baillie Welsh Carlyle, wife for not quite 40 years of a leading Victorian literary figure, is a pedantic one, however, in the face of Trudy Bliss' book, which reads like a superbly characterized novel.

Jane Welsh Carlyle in these letters is every inch the living woman, from girlhood to the grave.

Deflating a Dude

JANE'S story here begins when, not quite 20, she writes in 1821 to a girl friend of a beau who "vapoured back" to the Welsh household "in all the pride of two waistcoats (one of figured velvet, another of sky-blue satin), gossamer silk stockings and morocco leather slippers," observes that "these little things are great to little men" and adds that she would not like to pay his tailor's bill.

A short time later she is writing, with all the confidence of youth patronizing its elders, that an aunt who had not read a certain sentimental novel does not—poor thing—understand love, "but she has got a husband—such as he is."

When marriage approaches, as with many a woman before and since, Jane is assailed with tremulous thoughts about the new life. "Be always so good to me," she implores her future husband, "and I shall make the best and happiest wife." And, comfortingly, he writes back, "Oh, my Darling! I will always love thee." And, allowing for the kinks and crochets of human nature, and the preoccupation of a solitary occupation, writing, he always did. There is no mistaking the emotion in what he wrote to and about her in the last years of her life.

Bohemian Capers

BUT that is the end of the story. Before that there are the years when she was the young wife, concerned with the need for household thrift, relishing the story of the housemaid who, lacking a bustle, substituted three kitchen dusters.

These were the days, too, when the Carlyles, enjoying a mildly Bohemian life, talked of "gigmanity" (their term for philistine respectability); when her husband, "seized with a perfect convulsion of hospitality," insisted on improvising two dinner parties, and "the gigantic Thackeray" capered and "Dickens did all but go down on his knees" to make Jane waltz with him.

There were others of the famous, or to be famous, who also came to 5 Cheyne Row, Chelsea. One was Tennyson, whom she once had to entertain in her husband's absence. "Alfred is dreadfully embarrassed with women alone—for he entertains at one and and the same moment a feeling of almost adoration for them and an ineffable contempt! adoration I suppose for what they might be—contempt for what they are!"

To put Alfred at his ease, the hostess got out pipes and tobacco, brandy and water, "with a deluge of tea over and above." The future laureate and first Baron Tennyson apologized for polluting the house with smoke, but smoked on for three hours, "talking like an angel—only exactly as if he were talking with a clever man." One wonders if the angelic conversation was due solely to tobacco, or if he drank both tea and brandy; Jane's letter does not make it clear.

Pains and Shadows

THERE were wifely worries, too. Had Carlyle gotten around to filling out an income tax paper? More serious, a long period of jealousness, generally presumed to have been needless, of another woman. Other pains and shadows there were, too: a sort of semi-invalidism, and an accident when she was 62 followed by a further misery of illness. Then, not quite three years later, she died while riding in her brougham in Hyde Park.

Eighty-four years have passed since Jane Welsh Carlyle's death; but the reader of Trudy Bliss' biographically planned selection of the letters will still feel a pang for the loss of a real person.

In a Nutshell

THE BURNING GLASS. By John Franklin Bardin. Scribner's. 237 pp. $3.

THE story of one strange day on The Island—and the people who summer there. Suddenly, their profound intellectual and emotional involvements are exposed with contemptuous clarity in a series of biting drawings appearing on rocks and other public places. As the adults drift deeper into each other's sex lives, the children, anchorless and resentful, plan a fantastic interruption for the evening's big local event, an open air concert. Their plan is carried out to tragedy and, presumably, in time, to reform. Bardin's novel is a lurid, intellectually pretentious one inhabited by very few real people.

BACKWOODS UTOPIAS. The Sectarian and Owenite Phases of Communitarian Socialism in America: 1663-1829. By Arthur Eugene Bestor, jr. University of Pennsylvania Press. 288 pp. $3.50.

AN OBJECTIVE and valuable study of the utopian projects that featured early American history, the emphasis is placed chiefly on the ideas of Robert Owen and the Owenite experiments here. Dr. Bestor, associate professor of history at the University of Illinois, plans a second volume that will carry the story through the Fourierist movement of the 1840s. The two-volume work will apparently be definitive.

TEXAS BRAGS. Collected by John Randolph. Box 195, Huffsmith, Tex. 64 pp. Paper bound. 50 cents.

IF ANYONE is so naive as to think Texans don't enjoy a lack of modesty about their State, this exuberant little booklet will dispel the idea. Packed with odds and ends of fact and fancy, you can learn that Temple, Tex. (where the Sunday Editor of The Washington Post was born), has an ordinance requiring all United States Presidential trains to stop for 5 minutes; "'Salt of the Earth' was a phrase invented for Texas" and Texas jackrabbits "can stomp their feet so hard they cause earth tremors three counties off."

Foxy Business

Police Rush To the Hunt In Full Cry

HUNT WITH THE HOUNDS. By Mignon G. Eberhart. Random. 247 pp. $2.50

MIGNON EBERHART writes of the murder of a wealthy woman, in fact, a fox hunting woman. And the hounds of the law follow many a false scent in their attempts to run to earth the foxy murderer.

"Hunt With The Hounds" offers a passable picture of the Virginia riding country where the horses are as highly bred as their riders.

Ernestine Baily is shot in the back. Sue Poore gives Ernestine's husband, Jed, a watertight alibi. She had a tryst with Jed in the cabana; later she thought she saw him in his car near the big house at the moment she heard the fatal shot fired.

Ernestine, in the hour before she died, accused Jed. But Dr. Luddington, who heard the dying indictment, thought that either his politically ambitious son, Wat (in love with Ernestine), or Wat's jealous wife, Ruby, really committed the murder, and that Ernestine's deathbed accusation was sheer spite. Other suspects include Ernestine's sister, Camilla Duval, and ultimately Sue Poore herself.

Two other murders follow in quick succession. Sudden death comes to Dr. Ludington and the Baily groom.

The reader can understand priceless Aunt Caroline's greater interest in the fate of several horses involved than in any of the thoroughly expendable and parasitic human beings in this story.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

THE recent Associated Press report from Kansas City of the filing there of an application for incorporation of the "Harry S. Truman Library, Inc.," with the hope of its eventually housing "the writings, papers, relics and other material of the President," must have made others uneasy besides myself.

Inquiring around town, however, I learned that the President feels very strongly that his papers should eventually go to a Government institution, and not to a private or semiprivate one.

This is an attitude to be appreciated and highly applauded.

If Lincoln dead thereafter belonged to the ages, as it was so felicitously said, so do all men upon being elected President thereafter belong to their country, and their private history becomes a part of the fabric of public history. As they saw it, as things seemed to them, the facts known to them but not to many others, the interplay of personalities—this is the very stuff of history, and being national history it belongs in the Capital.

One can sympathize with those Missourians who would erect a library for Mr. Truman's papers, and respect their pride. It will be a sorry day when a State does not take pride in having a son in the White House, but once there he belongs to all his countrymen.

Recent Departures

UNFORTUNATELY, former President Hoover, with his papers in California, and the late President Roosevelt, with his Hyde Park library, set a new precedent.

Transportation may be easier than in Jefferson's day, but it is not convenient for the scholar to have to go to Hyde Park to consult FDR's papers, to Washington to consult those bearing on him in Government archives, and no one doesn't know where else to see those of Cabinet members. The convenience of scholars may seem a petty matter, but those who have written history know the thoughts that have been suggested by the proximity of materials to each other, and the importance of easy cross reference.

Ethically, the papers of Presidents and leaders in Government belong in public ownership. By right of generality and convenience, they belong in the Library of Congress, which, according to its annual report for 1949, is chiefly deficient only in the papers of the two Adamses, in Massachusetts; of Filmore, in New York; of Hayes and Harding, in Ohio, besides those of Hoover and FDR—whose papers are as far apart as their thinking.

Decentralization

PARENTHETICALLY, it would be interesting to know the true motives that led President Roosevelt to establish his library on the banks of the Hudson instead of the Potomac; to know if it were simply egotism, as sometimes said. It would be interesting to know if his papers were ever offered to the Library of Congress, either for housing there or for administration at Hyde Park. If the latter proposal were ever made, one can well understand a Librarian of Congress discouraging it, for it would set a precedent which would lead to the library being in business all over the country.

There are many things pertaining to a President that do not properly belong in the national library—as do his books and papers. Every man, and notably a President, has much around him in the way of personal objects—desk ornaments, for example—that become "association items" and memorabilia. These might quite fittingly be housed in a museum or other institution honoring a man in his native State. But the part should not take away from the whole; Presidents belong to all, their papers and books to the Nation.

Guerilla War Story Reminds Of Yugo Strife

THE WILDERNESS IS YOURS, by Rose Thurburn. William Morrow. 231 pp. $2.75.

HILARY SLADE, cool, determined and ruthless in ambition, agreed to the terms of Patkov, the guerilla leader. In return for a guerilla rising at the time of the liberation invasion, Slade's government would support Patkov after the war rather than his rival Kapska. The double cross was that Slade made the promise without the knowledge of his government, which, after liberating the country, promptly recognized Kapska.

This hard-hitting novel leaps from guerilla warfare in Patkov's steep mountain passes to political warfare in the government offices where Slade is rising fast in his career. His tools are people—first Patkov, then Angus Robbins, his subaltern, and finally his secretary, Rosie Hughes.

To Slade, Rosie and Robbins are immature because they live by an impractical code of clean and dirty, good and bad. Their sentimental notions about right and wrong made them useful in a war but dangerous in its aftermath when hidden wartime expediences came to light.

Miss Thurburn, an English journalist whose first novel this is, has created brilliantly realistic characters and a lean, rapid plot. Her thinly disguised account of what happened in Yugoslavia during World War II is less accurate than her keen portrayal of human drives.

Orphans' Towns Shelter Small Victims of War

By Adelaide Kerr

NEW YORK.—On Christmas Eve, 1945, young Father Guido Visendaz walked into a ruined barracks stable in Lanciano, Italy, and saw a sight that shocked him to a standstill.

Twenty cold, ragged, homeless boys lay huddled with a half-dozen stray dogs to keep warm. Their parents were dead, their homes destroyed in the war. They had been roaming the country, stealing in villages and farms to keep alive until police rounded them up and locked them in the stable.

Father Visendaz persuaded the town council to let him take charge of the boys. He got food and clothing and whitewashed the walls of their stable. The boys were sullen and sneering at first, but gradually they fell to work, too. They joined to build a home out of the stable which they called "the child's village."

There they lived and were schooled for years until they moved to new quarters, much bigger and much better, where 150 homeless boys now have a home.

Millions Like Them

THE problem of the Lanciano boys was multiplied by millions in Europe at the close of World War II. Homeless youngsters roamed the countryside or pilfered their living in rubble-strewn streets.

Where could these be housed and fed? How could they be built into balanced people who could lead happy, useful lives?

Europe found an answer in the children's communities which now house 10,000 youngsters in many countries. There is one in India. Like the Lanciano community, they sprang up out of pressing need, in a stable, a cellar, a tent or an abandoned military barracks.

In July, 1948, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) gave their leaders the first opportunity to meet by calling an international conference in Trogen, Switzerland.

Out of the conference grew the International Federation of Children's Communities now numbering 83 communities in Switzerland, France, Italy, Belgium, England, Austria, Germany, the Netherlands and Greece.

Experience Exchanged

THE federation's purpose is to raise funds for distribution, and to help communities exchange experience, train their workers and generally reach as high standards as they can. The federation now has an American committee headed by Carleton Washburne, director of the department of education of Brooklyn College.

The children's communities are alike in some respects. All practice some democratic procedure, which generally includes self government. All work to build health, stabilize emotions and educate minds. Virtually all have vocational training.

"Where we have those communities, the hatred, distrust and dislike of other nationals is wiped out," says Dr. Washburne. "The children of former enemy countries adapt themselves to one another quickly, although lots of adults found the adjustment longer and harder. In the home atmosphere, where children found affection and understanding, many learned to laugh and play again. Many war neuroses vanished.

"I hope the pattern used in the best of the children's communities becomes world-wide for the care of homeless children. It should completely take the place of orphan asylums."

HOUSEWIVES test the freshness of a loaf of bread by squeezing it. Now baking chemists have an intricate device that tests bread in the same way to measure objectively the staleness and rate of staling of bread. George F. Garnatz of the Kroger Food Foundation, Cincinnati, told the American Chemical Society.

It is based on the weight of the amount of mercury, running into a flask, needed to compress bread samples a certain amount. The machine is used in research to keep bread fresher longer. Some modified fats have been found that appear to retard staling by as much as 48 hours, Garnatz said.

Aunt Minnie Played

"HEARTS AND FLOWERS"

In the days of our grandparents, the reed organ was virtually a standard fixture in the average, middle-class American "front parlor." Around it, the family gathered to sing hymns on Sunday evenings, and everybody had an Aunt Minnie who could pump out "Hearts and Flowers" . . . and unfortunately did so at the drop of a hat. The organ in the parlor was prime beau-bait for the daughter of the family; accompanying her swain's singing on this wheezy old contraption was an important step in her well-planned conquest. The reed organ did not disappear from the American parlor because people lost their liking for organ music, but because the reed organ failed to satisfy a more mature musical taste. Then, fifteen years ago, came the first Hammond, and America's preference for organ music awoke from its long sleep. Today, the vast majority of Hammond Organs are used by indiyiduals in their homes. So maybe our fundamental preferences do not change a great deal. But we demand a never-ceasing improvement in the quality of the things we use. Hammond satisfied this demand for quality and thus revived an interest that has already created a greater demand for home organs than existed in grandfather's day.

WHAT DO YOU SEE IN YOUR CHILDREN'S EYES?

To only a few parents is given the wisdom of seeing, in the eyes of his child, the soul that the poet tells us is mirrored there. We cannot detect, and children cannot tell us what hopes and longings and dreams are stirring in them . . . what creative capacities are locked in their little beings!

But even the ordinarily wise parent can give a child the opportunity to express himself . . . to demonstrate whether or not the creative urge is part of his make-up.

You may have thought that a musical education for your child is "too expensive to consider at this time." If so, Campbell's would like to remind you that it costs only $9.50 a month to put a new piano in your home on Campbell's popular Rental-Purchase Plan. So there is really no excuse for you to delay any longer giving your child the opportunity of learning whether or not he or she has musical talent!

Come in and talk with Mr. Leonard, who has guided hundreds of parents in their search to find the means of giving their children life-long happiness and satisfaction. He will be happy to talk with you, and give you the benefit of his wide experience in determining whether or not your child has a latent musical talent. There is, of course, no charge for this advice.

Say It Ain't So, Joe, That You'll Try Comeback

With Shirley Povich

HERE WE GO, again. Another heavyweight champion's "retirement" has come unstuck. Even as did Jim Jeffries, Willard, Dempsey and the others except Tunney, Joe Louis is reaching for those mittens again, with a mind full of reconquest.

It is disillusionment for the Say-It-Ain't-So-Joe sentimentalists who had been hearing rumblings of his comeback talk and hoping against it.

Povich

Even as there are folks who say they don't want anybody, ever, to break Babe Ruth's homerun record, you have heard it about Louis: That they want to be spared the sight, or ever the possibility, of an aging and once-great champion being cut up and dumped in an inglorious heap by a second-rater, with youth.

And, obviously, this comeback isn't at all what Joe Louis himself wanted. He's a reluctant returnee. Back in 1936, after he had finished off Jimmy Braddock for the world's heavyweight title and there was haste to establish the character of young Joe Louis, he was asked the question: What kind of a champion did he want to be?

"Like Jack Dempsey?" we asked him.

"Yeah," he said at first, and then he said, "No, like Tooney. I wanna lick evuhbuddy and then retire like Tooney did. They'll remember me longer."

HE DID it, too, he thought. Back on that June night in 1948 while Yankee Stadium flunkies were still scraping off the ring floor the inert mass that had been Jersey Joe Walcott, "Winner, and Still Champion Joe Louis" looked into a microphone and said, coast to coast: "That was it, Mom . . . my last fight."

Down in Miami the next January, he made it official. He was abdicating the title, he said, and designating the winner of a Walcott-Ezzard Charles fight as the new champion. It was not a precedent for a champion. Back in 1905 Jeffries had done much the same thing. Louis was turning promoter, as a partner in the International Boxing Club.

It didn't work out. The IBC barely broke even on the Charles-Walcott promotion in Chicago. The strike of the Boxing Managers Guild cut deeply into the promotion business this year. Louis was missing out on those quick, lush paydays he used to earn as a fighter . . . and on his neck, too, were the men from the Bureau.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue, that is . . . What Louis owed them, none would say for certain. The estimates ran from $56,000 to $250,000 in those dratted back taxes he somehow never got around to paying. The Bureau was getting insistent, so . . . Louis knew only one way out, and that was to fight again.

Back in 1945, the amount that Louis owed was $117,000. He got a big, $625,000 pay-day in 1946 from the second Billy Conn fight, but even that sum couldn't bail him out. Current taxes took a tremendous bite out of it. And he was in pawn, as usual, to Mike Jacobs for monies advanced to him during the 3½ years he was in the service.

NOW HE WANTS to make a deal with the Government to wipe out his debt with the purse he will get from a comeback fight. It will be a nice trick, if he does. Sometimes the Government does compromise on taxes. Louis' attorneys have reminded the Internal Revenue people that he donated his entire purse of $47,000 from the second Buddy Baer fight in 1942, to Navy Relief. And when Army Relief asked him for a similar gesture, he fought Abe Simon for nothing, with $36,146 accruing to the Army.

In the 14 years Louis was fighting, minus his service career, he accumulated purses from fights and exhibitions that totaled over $3,500,000, and now you're probably asking how a guy with that much income could get overboard.

Louis could. With him, it was easy-come, easy-go. He traveled first cabin, with entourage. He was wondrously generous to his mother. He bought a dude ranch. He set up a non-profit and costly automotive school in Chicago to teach colored boys a gainful trade. He paid a handsome alimony. Whenever he needed a fast buck, there was always Uncle Mike Jacobs to loan it. He was betting as high as $100 a hole, in golf.

Between the two Walcott fights, he was hornswoggled into a London Fair exhibition that didn't pay off. Early this year, he signed to travel with a circus for 94 days at $1000 a day. And always there were those taxes. Ninety-four thousand dollars for three months work was slow going, he couldn't help but think, after earning $349,288 for 2 minutes and 4 seconds of fighting the night he stopped Max Schmeling in round one, 1938.

JIM JEFFRIES

And so he's going back to the most profitable business he knows—with the hope that a September fight with Ezzard Charles will get him out of the barrel. And it might, if the Government is lenient.

IN HIS comeback, Louis is making only one stipulation. He isn't working his way to any title bout, like an ordinary challenger. He insists on stepping in at the top, against the man most recognized as the champion, Charles.

The Louis-Charles fight will do all right, too. Perhaps a million

Lemon Wins 16th, 4 to 1, Hits Homer

Cleveland, July 29 (AP).—The Cleveland Indians continued to crowd the American League leaders today by dropping Boston, 4 to 1, as Pitcher Bob Lemon rationed seven hits and belted a homer himself.

It was the eighth straight win for the league's leading pitcher and ran his record to 16 wins against four losses. He was in trouble only once as the tribe won its ninth game in the last 11 starts.

In the eighth, Boston scored its only run. Matt Batts doubled and went to third as Maurice McDermott grounded out. Then Bill Goodman singled, scoring Batts. John Pesky followed with another single, but Dom DiMaggio hit into a double play.

Cleveland got three runs in the first five innings off Lefty Chuck Stobbs. Al Rosen doubled in the second, got to third on Easter's fly out and home on Joe Gordon's foul out. Luke Easter hit his 21st homer in the fourth. It traveled 370 feet just over Fielder Tom Wright's glove into the right feld bull pen. Lemon's homer came in the fifth.

In the eighth, Cleveland got a run off McDermott, who relieved Stobbs in the sixth. Dale Mitchell and Lou Boudreau walked before Rosen singled, scoring Mitchell.

Except for the eighth, Lemon allowed only two Boston runners to get past first base. Bobby Doerr tripled in the fifth. Walt Dropo singled in the seventh and was sacrificed to second on Doerr's bunt.

The 29,904 who bought tickets boosted the Indians' home attendance over the million mark—to 1,014,156.

Detroit Holds First

Wertz Bats Tigers to 8-5 Win Over A's

Detroit, July 29 (AP).—Outfielder Vic Wertz's big bat kept the Detroit Tigers atop the American League race today as he slammed a homer and two doubles to enable them to come from behind and nip the Philadelphia Athletics, 8-5.

The Tigers, trailing 4-0 when the scoreboard showed that both Cleveland and the Yankees had won today, staged an uphill battle to protect their slender half-game lead in the pennant scramble.

Wertz's 19th homer was his fourth in three days as he drove in three runs to run his RBI total to 92.

A's Maul Ted Gray

The A's grabbed an early four-run lead as they mauled starting pitcher Teddy Gray, who failed for the fourth time in his bid for win No. 11.

Two hits and a walk figured in a two-run second inning and the A's added two more in the third as relief pitcher Carl Scheib and Eddie Joost homered consecutively to make it 4-0. It was Scheib's first and No. 12 for Joost.

Gray and relief pitcher Marlin Stuart pitched two-hit ball over the last six innings with Stuart getting the victory, his first decision of the year.

Wertz Gets Homer

Wertz doubled in the first Detroit run in the third and added another on his fifth-inning homer.

The Tigers finally made it a four-all game in the seventh and broke it wide open with a four-run, four-hit eighth to move out in front 8-4.

Ponder Comes From Last To Win Arlington Handicap

By Charles Dunkley

Chicago, July 20 (AP).—Calumet Farm's stretch-running Ponder bounded out of tenth place today to win the $82,500 Arlington Handicap by three quarters of a length at Arlington Park before a sweltering crowd estimated at 26,000.

Ponder, 1949 Kentucky Derby winner and conqueror of the famed Noor and Citation this year, overhauled the little 3-year-old filly, Aegina, in a thrillin gstretch charge. Aegina, owned by Hal Price Headley, Lexington, Ky., finished second. Inseparable was third and Cochise, one of two Eastern invaders in the race, fourth in a field of 10.

The victory, worth $46,800, was the first scored by Calumet Farm in five stakes starts during the 36-day Arlington meeting which closed today. The win zoomed Ponder's earnings to $527,775 to take rank along side Citation, Stymie, Armed, Assault, On Trust and Whirlaway as winners of more than $500,000.

With 10 starters, the net value of the race was $20,000 for second place, third $10,000 and fourth $5000.

The four-year-old Ponder, with Jockey Steve Brooks astride his back, ran the mile and a quarter in 2:01 3-5. That was just three fifths of a second slower than the track record for the race established by Historian in 1946. Ponder carried topweight of 128 pounds.

Ponder was made a 13-to-10 betting choice and returned $4.60, $4.20 and $3.00. Aegina, at odds of $61.50 to one, paid $43.00 to place and $14.80 to show. The show price on Inseparable, which ran with Oil Capitol as an entry, was $4.20.

Ponder's triumph raised his earnings for the year to $205,550. The son of Pensive-Miss Rushin, by Blenheim II, earning his $527,575 in two seasons.

Aegina, ridden by Earl Williams, held the lead going into the stretch turn and was not overtaken until the last sixteenth of a mile of the mile and a quarter affair.

The little filly saved the place by a neck from Hasty House Farm's fast-closing Inseparable, ridden by Kenneth Church. Brandywine stable's Cochise had the renowned Eddie Arcaro in the saddle.

After Cochise, the field finished in this order: Walmac Farm's Volcanic, King Ranch's Curandero, A. G. Vanderbilt's Loser Weeper, Oil Capitol, John Wolf's Lucky Codine and Eugene Constantin, Jr.'s, Prop. King Ranch, which had named Curandero and Better Self as its entry, withdrew Better Self late in the afternoon.

Ponder's winning time was the third fastest ever recorded for the race since its inaugural in 1929. Historian holds the race's record of 2:01 which bettered the previous record of 2:01 1-5 set by Discovery in 1935.

Ponder, as usual, came from

Yanks Blast Scarborough; 13th for Lopat

Chicago, July 29 (AP).—Outfielder Hank Bauer blasted four hits, including a home run, to lead the New York Yankees to a 11-4 triumph over the Chicago White Sox today. The Yanks thus remained half a game behind first place Detroit.

Ray Scarborough started for the Sox although feeling a stiffness in his shoulder and was knocked out as the Yankees scored five times in the first inning. Luis Aloma replaced him and yielded the other six New York runs.

Behind the long-ball hitting of his mates, Eddie Lopat rolled to his 13th victory in 18 decisions.

Al Sima Ill, Sent Home

St. Louis, July 29.—Nats Pitcher Al Sima was sent back to Washington today after complaining of a pain in his side and inability to digest his food. St. Louis Cardinal Physician Dr. Robert Hyland said the left-hander may have appendicitis.

Sima will enter Georgetown University Hospital where Dr. George Resta, Nats' doctor, will determine whether an operation is necessary. An appendectomy would side-line Sima for about six weeks.

Sima first complained of illness in Chicago, and again in St. Louis yesterday. Penicilin was administered yesterday and this morning. Dr. Hyland's examination this morning revealed Sima has a low blood count, usually a symptom of appendicitis.

Harris Fails Again; Noren Socks Homer

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

St. Louis, July 29. — The St. Louis Browns cast their strange spell on the Nats again today, and whipped 'em, 10-9.

For a while, it looked like the Nats might come out of the trance they go into every time they play St. Louis. They scored eight runs in a mighty fourth-inning offensive But leading, 8-4, they went into a swoon again, and lost their 11th game in 15 contests with the Browns. The victory and an Athletic defeat moved the Browns out of the cellar.

The home team swung the victory in much the same manner as it did the night before with Ken Wood, a .211 hitter, blasting relief pitcher Mickey Harris for a late-inning single to drive in the decisive run. Today it occurred in the eighth inning, last night in the ninth.

Fifth Defeat for Harris

Harris went down to his fifth defeat of the year and his second within 18 hours. He has won four.

Fast-balling Cliff Fannin, St. Louis' third pitcher in Washington's fourth-inning outburst, came out of it with his third win against five losses. He gave up the Nats' last eight hits in the last 5 2/3 innings, but Washington could bunch them for only one run.

The Nats outhit the Browns, 14-11, collecting seven of their blows in the eight-run inning. In that big push which sent the St. Louis starter Cuddles Marshall and Duane Pillette to the showers, Cass Michaels blasted out two singles, Sam Dente a single and double, and Irv Noren a three-run homer, his seventh of the season.

The rally gave Washington an 8-4 lead. But the Browns pecked away at Jim Pearce, who succeeded starter Sandy Consuegra for two runs in the fourth, and smacked Harris, the third Washington moundsman, for three runs to tie it at nine all in the sixth.

The tying run, by the way, was propelled over the plate by the same Mr. Wood, whose fly ball backed right-fielder Sam Mele to the wall, and scored Sherman Lollar from third base.

Coleman Hits 3-Run Homer

Wood had come into the game to replace lefthanded hitting Ray Coleman against southpaw pitching Harris. Earlier, Coleman had highlighted a four-run Browns' rally in the third frame with a three-run homer. It was his fifth circuit swat of the season.

Pirates Set Back Phils, 7-4, On O'Connell's 3-Run Homer

Philadelphia, July 29 (AP).—Shortstop Dan O'Connell's homer with two on sparked a four-run fifth inning today to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 7 to 4 victory over the league leading Philadelphia Phils.

Three singles and the homer broke up a 2-2 deadlock as Bill Werle scattered 10 hits to win his sixth victory against seven losses.

The Phils tallied first on a single by Richie Ashburn and Del Ennis' twentieth home run of the season in the third inning.

Wally Westlake's single, O'Connell's double, Danny Murtaugh's infield hit and an infield out in the fourth enabled the Pirates to tie up the game.

In the fifth, Bob Dillinger singled and after Ted Beard fanned went to second on Johnny Hopp's single. Dillinger scored on Westlake's single. Then came O'Connell's second homer of the season, Hopp and Westlake scoring ahead of him.

Emory "Bubba" Church suffered his first defeat after four successive triumphs. He was lifted in the fourth for a pinchhitter.

Giants Make It Nine in Row; They Whip Cards Again, 4-3

New York, July 29 (AP).—Eddie Stanky and Dave Kooslo combined to lead the New York Giants to their ninth straight victory today, a 4-3 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Stanky collected a double and two singles in three official times at bat and scored twice to lead the Giants' offensive against Howie Pollet. Koslo relieved Starter Jim Hearn in the third inning, put an end to a three-run rally with a double-play ball, then pitched scoreless ball the rest of the way to record his 11th success.

The defeat left the second place Cards still two and a half games behind the league leading Philadelphia Phils who bowed to the Pittsburgh Pirates, 7-4.

The Giants took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on three singles and a sacrifice but the Cards went ahead in the third, routing Hearn, their former teammate with two hits and three walks.

The Giants tied the score at 3-3 in their half of the third when Monte Irvin walked, stole second and score on a single by Don Mueller. Singles by Stanky and Whitey Lockman put men on first and third in the fourth. Stanky scored what proved to be the winning run when Bobby Thomson slammed into a double play.

Burke Fires 7-Under-Par 65 to Take Lead Away From Snead

Sam Three Strokes Back With 201

Sioux City, Iowa, July 29 (AP).—Jack Burke, jr., the little White Plains, N. Y., favorite hopped into the 54-hole lead in the Sioux City Open golf tournament today.

Burke, 165-pounder with hundreds of backers in the gallery, posted a 65, seven under par, for his third round and a 198 total.

The Leaders:

Sioux City, Iowa, July 29 (AP).—Low 54-hole scores in the Sioux City Open golf tournament today:

Jack Burke, jr.	133	65—198
Skip Alexander	133	68—201
Sam Snead	131	70—201
Paul O'Leary	132	70—202
Lloyd Mangrum	136	68—204
Henry Ransom	134	70—204
Chuck Klein	137	67—204
Fred Hawkins	136	69—205
Ralph Blomquist	138	68—206
Marty Furgol	138	69—207
Jerry Barber	139	68—207
Ed (Porky) Oliver	136	71—207
Julius Boros	136	73—209
Fred Haas	140	69—209
Glenn Teal	142	67—209
Jimmy Clark	140	70—210
Norman Von Nida	138	72—210
Dick Metz	141	69—210

Jack's blazing play carried him three strokes ahead of Sam Snead, who headed the parade into today's action with 131.

Snead, opening the $15,000 tournament with 65-66, slipped to a third round 70 and a 201 figure. He was tied for second with Skip Alexander.

Alexander, who set the first day pace with an Elmwood Course record 63, had a 68 for his third round work.

Paul O'Leary of Bismarck, N. Dak., youngest professional on the circuit at 22, turned in a 70 for a 202 mark and fourth place. The thin fellow had been a shot behind Snead at 36 holes.

Mangrum Ties for Fifth

Three veterans, Llyod Mangrum, Henry Ransom and Chuck Klein, landed in a tie for fifth at 204 where they were a single shot in front of Fred Hawkins, the El Paso, Tex., entry.

Ralph Blomquist of Glendale, Calif., moved in at 206 and Marty Furgol, Hollywood; Jerry Barber, Philadelphia, and Ed (Porky) Oliver, Seattle, had 207's.

Doug Ford, Briarcliff, N. Y., had a 66, second low score today, but he was working on a 144 36-hole figure and wound up with 210.

Burke, 27-year-old sensation of the winter circuit with victories at the St. Petersburg (Fla.) and Harlingen (Tex.) Opens, was the sentimental choice of most of the 5000 spectators who trooped over the 6506-yard Elmwood layout.

You heard whispers of "Make that putt, Jack," all along the route. Jack usually obliged with sharp putting and sizzling other shots. He was four under par for the first nine and three under for the second.

Hubbell Back In Box Today For 'Giants'

By Ralph Roden

New York, July 29 (AP).—Memories will be stirred at the Polo Grounds tomorrow.

St. Louis Cardinal and New York Giant stars of bygone days will turn back the pages of time with a three-inning exhibition game.

The eyes of all present will center on the mound, where Carl Hubbell, the famous "Meal Ticket," will pitch for the "old" Giants.

Hubbell turned in one of his greatest pitching feats against the Cards in the Polo Grounds on July 2, 1933. He blanked the Red Birds, 1-0, in 18 innings in the first game of a doubleheader, outpitching Tex Carleton and Jess (Pop) Haines.

Hubbel allowed only six hits, fanned 12 and didn't walk a batter that day. In the second game Leroy (Tarzan) Parmelee shut out Dizzy Dean and the Cards, 1-0, winning out on a homer by Johnny Vergez. Oddly, Parmelee and Vergez later played for the Cards.

Two of the foremost sluggers in the game's annals, Mel Ott of the Giants and Ducky Wucky Joe Medwick of the Cards, also will be on hand.

Giants—Pitchers, Hal Schumacher and Fred Fitzsimmons; catchers, Gus Mancuso and Harry Danning; infielders, Sam Leslie, Hush Critz, "Blondie" Ryan, Travis Jackson, Fred Lindstrom and Johnny Vergez; outfielders, Hank Leiber, George (Kiddo) Davis and Jo Jo Moore.

Griffs Get 8 In 4th, Still Lose, 10-9

scored four off Consuegra in the third. Marshall got a single when Mele called for his blooper in First Baseman Mickey Vernon's territory, and then let it drop for a single.

With one out, Dick Kokos got a single when Second Baseman Cass Michaels misplayed his double-play grounder. At this point, Coleman socked his homer onto the right-field roof for three runs.

The Browns weren't through though. Roy Sievers reached first on Dente's error, stole second on Al Evans' low throw, and scored the fourth run of the inning on Snuffy Stirnweiss' two-bagger.

Down, 4-0, the Nats came to life all of a sudden and rocked Marshall, Pillette and Fannin for seven hits and eight runs and took an 8-4 lead into the last of the fourth. Here's how the big inning went:

With one out, Mele walked and Michaels singled him to third. Mele scored and Michaels took second on Marshall's wild pitch. Dente doubled, scoring Michaels, and Evans singled, scoring Dente, with three runs across, Pillette replaced Marshall.

Sherry Robertson, batting for Consuegra, and Eddie Yost, both walked, loading the bases. Gil Coan sent in two runs with a single to center, and Noren clouted his three-run homer onto the right field roof.

That was all for Pillette, Fannin came to fill the bases on a walk to Vernon and singles to Michaels and Dente. But he escaped without being scored on as Evans fouled out.

Nats Increase Lead

Pearce replaced Consuegra and threatened to throw the lead right away. He walked Bill Sommers, hurled a single at Fannin and walked Lenhardt and Kokos to force in one run. He got out of it with only two runs scored as Lollar hit into a double play, Lenhardt scoring.

Washington stretched its lead to 9-6 in the sixth on Noren's single and Mele's double. On the third of Michaels' four hits, a short single to center, Mele played it safe, pulling up at third. Fannin shut the door by getting Dente and Evans on popups.

Off Harris in the sixth, the Browns garnered three runs on two hits to tie the game. Fannin singled, Lenhardt walked, and Lollar brought 'em home with a tremendous 420-foot triple to center. Wood projected himself into the picture for the first time by flying deep to Mele, scoring Lollar with the tying run after the catch.

Harris mowed the Browns down in order in the seventh, and retired the first two in the ninth. But Kokos clipped him for a double, and Lollar was walked intentionally so Harris could get at Wood. But it was Wood did the getting. He bashed Harris' second pitch into center scoring Kokos with the tie-breaker.

IN SHORT . . . Cass Michaels suffered a spike wound near his right ankle in the fifth inning when Roy Sievers slid into second base for a double. However, Michaels remained in the game, and had four singles and a walk in five trips . . . The Nats will try again tomorrow afternoon to win their first double-header of the season. They've failed 12 times previously . . . On the mound for Washington will be Joe Haynes (4-3) and Elmer Singleton (1-1). The Browns will counter with Ned Garver (8-10) and Stubby Overmire (3-8).

dollar gate, because the Louis name still has glamour, and his take could be a nice 40 percent. And not only that. It will be the biggest radio-television package of all time in the fight business. Out of the video-radio, Louis will do very well. The last Walcott-Louis fight fetched $100,000 for the broadcast-telecast rights. With television now a bigger business, the sponsors may bring it up to at least $200,000.

There's yet another angle, to the Louis comeback, and it isn't monetary. Joe was proud of his role as the most famous Negro American figure of his time. He's missing the acclaim that dwindled with his retirement. His friends say he's painfully aware now that Jackie Robinson and Larry Doby have usurped his place as No. One.

Louis always was a proud guy. They were talking about that up at Pompton Lakes in 1946, when he was training for his second fight with Conn. This time he was taking Conn seriously, after being outpointed for most of 13 rounds and barely saving his title by knocking Billy out in the thirteenth.

HIS TRAINER, Manny Seamon, was talking about Louis' weight for the fight. "He's going in at 207 this time," said Seamon. "He talked me into training him down too fine the last time. He was self-conscious about Conn weighing anly 174, and he said I had to get him down below 200. I let him in at 199½, and he was drawn and stale."

It has been Louis' weight that has worried his friends. Between fights, he has zoomed to as much as 230, and somehow that mustache he began to affect made him look even pudgier. In the last Walcott fight, he was down to 212, as far as he could get with assiduous training.

It was evident in the Walcott fights that he wasn't the old Louis. Three times in the two battles, Jersey Joe had the champ on the floor, and apparently won the decision in the first one until they raised Louis' hand at the finish. That was the night that Louis, in disgust at his own futility to catch up with the fleeing 34-year-old Walcott, had attempted to leave the ring even before the decision was announced.

He never did admit that he believed he had lost the decision, but his actions spoke it. And in the second Walcott fight he was no sure winner, either, until with a burst of his old fury, he caught up with Jersey Joe and knocked him out in the 11th round.

NEVER before was Louis so determined, as in that second Walcott fight. Traditionally gentle with his sparring partners, he got mean and slapped them around cruelly in the weeks of training for that one. Yet he was slow, and befuddled by Jersey Joe until he landed his knockout punch.

In Charles, he'll be meeting a fast, but stand-up guy as contrasted with the agile Walcott, and not as smart as Walcott, either, though a better straight puncher. In his prime, Joe could dispatch the likes of Charles in any round he chose to name.

But Joe's 36 now, and perhaps somewhat out of breath, and no sure-shot against even the likes of Charles. He has something special to shoot for, though: No heavyweight champion ever came out of retirement to win back his title.

The most notable failure, of course, was Jeffries, who in 1905 gave up the championship, only to return five years later as a warmed-over White Hope to fight Jack Johnson at the insistence of those who demand Nordic supremacy in the prize ring. The fat, slow, reluctant Jeffries was knocked out in 15 rounds after being beaten all the way. Jeffries was 35 then. My gosh, Joe Louis is a year older.

Aussies Sweep Davis Cup Play From Mexico

Mexico City, July 29 (AP).—Australia's Jack Bromwich and Frank Sedgman swept the North American zone Davis Cup eliminations today and appear the combination to meet the defending United States championship team in the challenge round at Forest Hills.

Before that they have a little business to take care of in the form of Lennart Bergelin and Sven Davidsson of Sweden, who beat Denmark at Buastad. Sweden, today for the European zone championship. But Australia will be a prohibitive favorite to take care of the Swedes.

Australia won the American zone title 3-0, as Bromwich and Sedgman beat Mexico's Gustavo Palafox and Armanda Vega in straight sets—6-4, 7-5, 6-2. The Aussie stars had won their singles events from Vego and Palafox yesterday.

Bergelin and Davidsson also won in straight sets and took a 3-0 lead in the best-of-five series. They downed Kurt Nielson and Torben Ulrich, 6-2, 6-2, 6-2. They had won the singles yesterday.

Australia and Sweden will clash at Rye, N. Y., August 11-13 to determine which team tackles the United States in the challenge round at Forest Hills, August 25-27.

Both here and at Buastad there will be two singles matches tomorrow but they are only formalities away back to win after Oil Capitol, Cochise, and Lucky Codine had set the pace the first half mile; Oil Capitol, with E. J. Knapp up, was out in front of Cochise by a length after six fulongs, while Ponder was last in the field.

PONDER—From P. 1-C

Ponder Wins Handicap

Then Ponder began to move. At the mile was reached, he was fifth with Cochise in front of Inseparable by a length and Aegina third, only a half length behind. Into the stretch they went with Aegina taking command, Inseparable second, Cochise third, and Ponder fourth, making his move on the outside of the field.

Jockey Brooks set down the Calumet star in a powerful closing drive, but little Aegina was hard to catch and Inseparable was holding on as usual. At the 16th pole, Ponder finally got in front and hit the finish line driving hard.

Cochise, which went into the race with five stakes' events to his credit this year on eastern tracks, wound up three lengths behind Inseparable.

With $75,000 in added money, it was the richest handicap of the summer season here.

Ponder's triumph was his fifth in nine starts this year and his fourth stakes victory, in one of which—the $50,000 San Antonio Handicap—he beat both Citation and the sensational Irish-bred Noor.

Including today's win purse, Ponder now stands seventh in the list of all-time money winning horses, the list headed by his stablemate, Citation. Ponder won only $400 as a 2-year-old.

Torgeson's Homers Help Sain Beat Reds, 9-1, for 14th Win

First Sacker Runs Streak To 19 Games

Boston, July 29 (AP).—Boston's Braves today combined a heavy hitting attack with Johnny Sain's classy seven-hit pitching for a 9-1 decision ove rthe Cincinnati Reds whose score was Ted Kluszewski's eighteenth homer of the season.

Boston First Sacker Earl Torgeson, who ran his hitting streak through 19 games, poled a pair of homers and another hit glanced off the top of the right-field bull pen fence and landed in the playing field for a triple.

The homers were Torgy's fourteenth and fifteenth and eight of them have been off Cincinnati pitchers.

After scoring their first run in the opening inning on Torgy's triple and a double by Sid Gordon, the Tribe wrapped up the decision —their fiftieth—with a three-run burst in the fourth.

The loss was the twelfth of the season for Herman Wehmeier, his third consecutive defeat, and his third to the Braves whom he has beaten once.

Sain, who now has a 14-7 record, registered his first victory over the Reds who beat him earlier in the campaign.

Williams Risks Title Chances Here

World's Lightweight Champion Ike Williams will be fighting one of the most important scraps of his career when he clashes with Charley Salas, Mexican-Italian welterweight, in a 10-round bout at Griffith Stadium a week from tomorrow night.

The battle is a nontitle, over-the-weight affair and will decide whether Williams seeks a welterweight championship match later this summer.

Williams' ambition long has been to hold both titles, but his manager, Frank Palermo, said that if he does not beat Salas decisively, he will stick to the lightweight class.

George Costner, a welterweight, upset Williams earlier this year and Salas will be carrying a weight advantage of 10 pounds or better.

Palermo told Matchmaker Gabe Menendez that if Williams defeats Salas, he will arrange a return bout with Costner and then seek a shot at the welterweight crown.

Palermo said that Williams had signed to meet Welterweight Champion Sugar Ray Robinson in September, but those plans were upset when he dropped the unexpected decision to Costner.

Salas is regarded as a formidable test for Williams. He has won his last 11 straight fights and never has been knocked out in more than 100 professional battles.

Tickets for the match go on sale at Turner's tomorrow morning.

MIDDLEBURG, VA., July 29. If Joe Louis can attempt a comeback at 36, what's wrong with Stymie trying it at 9?

Nothing, Mrs. Hirsch Jacobs, his owner, has decided and today Stymie arrived here from his Kentucky stud farm to go into training for a return to the races next fall.

Stymie's and Louis' motives are the same, in one respect. Both want to be champs again. While Louis is out to unseat Ezzard Charles, Stymie hopes to regain the money-winning crown from Citation.

Financially, however, it's a different matter. Louis needs the money to pay up a slew of back income taxes. Stymie is unburdened by such problems. He's got all the money he'll ever need. He's already earned $918,000, but he wants that crown again.

Citation has banked $938,639 for Owner Warren Wright, but the racing days of the Calumet Farms' ace are feared over. Leg trouble. And if Stymie shapes up, he'll be hot after Citation's laurels in New York in September—about the time Louis goes after Charles.

"WE JUST DON'T know whether he'll shape up and won't know for about five weeks," said Jack Skinner, the ruddy-faced Virginia trainer who has quartered and trained Stymie here for the past five winters.

"Right now, he's a sick horse. Got shipping fever when they vanned him over from Kentucky. Thought we were gonna lose him for a while. Had a temperature of 104. Doin' much better now. Doc Howard gave him a shot of penicillin and he's stopped his coughing, but he's still sick. Only snapped at me once or twice this morning. That's how I know he's sick. Usually, he's always snapping at me, sort of playfully, you know."

Stymie, for whom Owner Jacobs claimed for only $1500 six years ago, is more than just a horse to Trainer and Mrs. Skinner and to the gas station attendant, the boys at the general store and many other local villagers.

"Why, he's practically part of the family," Mrs. Skinner said as she rubbed the nose of the sick-eyed brown speedster. "Every winter he's here we give him this same stall in the barn. I call it the 'room with the views.' If you notice, you'll see it has two exposures. It's Stymie's room, nobody else's."

THROUGH THE years, the Skinners have quartered and trained many a fine thoroughbred, but none had the fascination of Stymie for villagers and tourists.

"This morning when I was in front of the bank chewing the fat with a few friends a fellow asked me 'how's the Big Horse, Jack?'" Skinner explained. "Now how do you reckon he found out that Stymie was sick? See, it's like I say, people around here just know when Stymie is at my place.

"People here look on Stymie the same way they do a poor person who made good, sort of up from the ranks," said Mrs. Skinner. "Mr. Jacobs only paid $1500 for him. And he's got the sweetest disposition in the world. Despite all his success, he doesn't have the big head, not Stymie, he's one of the boys," she added.

"Why, we get postcards and letters for Stymie wishing him a speedy recovery when he isn't feeling well and we've even gotten telegrams for him wishing him a happy birthday."

"LAST WINTER, a couple of Australian youngsters were in Washington for a visit. Do you know what they told their parents? 'We don't want to see Washington, we want to see Stymie.' And, bless 'em, they came down here and saw him, too."

Skinner allowed how he would let Stymie take it easy for the time being, "just loaf."

"In about a week, we'll jog him and a little later we'll do a two-minute lick with him. Then we'll step up his training over on Mr. Ziegler's race track. Then we'll see. But right now he's sick, and he's got to get well first before we do anything.

"Even though he's sick, he's got a great disposition. He's no cribber, or weaver, or stall walker. He's got class, even when he's not feeling good."

"JACK," INTERRUPTED Mrs. Skinner, "where are Stymie's oats?"

"Took 'em away from him this morning, why?"

"I was just wondering, because Stymie was looking around for them over there in the corner where you always keep them. He knows he's home now."

About four miles down the road from the Skinners' place, at Mrs. Marie Moore's High Hope Farm in The Plains, dwells another high-salaried racing star, Gallorette, top money winning filly of all time.

"Wonder what a colt by those two would sell for?" asked the Skinners in unison.

A neigh from Stymie was the only answer.

Mulloy Goes Into Net Final With Cochell

Southampton, N. Y., July 29 (AP). Big Gardnar Mulloy, the 36-year-old veteran of the tennis wars, and young Earl Cochell stroked their way into the final round of the annual Meadow Club tennis tournament today.

Mulloy of Coral Gables, Fla., crushed 23-year-old Dick Savitt of Orange, N. J., 7—5, 6—8, 6—1, 6—3, while Cochell, a Los Angeles player who never has quite lived up to his potential, whipped Art Larsen of San Leandro, Calif., 6—2, 6—4, 6—0.

Mulloy, the defending champion and top-seeded entry, was at his best in stopping Savitt, a Cornell University player who has won most of the Eastern Circuit championships this year.

Only in the second set, when Savitt came on from 1—5 to win, did Mulloy let up in his soundly planned game. Apparently determned to win the approval of Davis Cup Captain Arick Mann, Mulloy won the third set with a fine assortment of placements and cross-court volleys that took most of the fight out of Savitt.

Cochell, who has a penchant for clowning on the court, was in a mighty serious mood as he mowed down Larsen, seeded No. 2 in the tourney and the sixth ranking player in the country, in just a few minutes more than an hour.

HERMAN ON BALL—Herman Ball, head coach of the Washington Redskins, strikes a pose which he hopes will be prophetic for the approaching professional football season. He is "on the ball," in training camp in Los Angeles. This will be Ball's first full year as head coach

Taylor Rallies to Win D. C. Tennis Crown

Cantwell's Game Cracks In 4th Set

Mack Taylor came from far behind to defeat Frank Cantwell, 1—6, 6—4, 3—6, 6—4, 6—2, and win the men's singles title in the District of Columbia Recreation Department tennis tournament at 16th and Kennedy sts. nw. yesterday.

First-seeded Mrs. Pearl McCoy captured the women's crown by winning over third-ranked Clara Bias, 6—3, 6—4. Championships in the men's and women's doubles and the women's consolation singles will be decided today.

An eight-game streak, started midway through the fourth set, enabled the ambidextrous Taylor to stave off almost certain defeat and overcome Cantwell's big lead.

After winning two of the first three sets, Cantwell took the first three games of the fourth, allowing Taylor only three points.

Cantwell's Game Falls Apart

The next two games were split, then Cantwell's game fell apart. He stopped rushing the net as he did with success previously and his corner baseline shots failed to find the mark.

Unable to earn his points, Cantwell mistakenly tried to play Taylor's game of steady returns. Taylor continued to retrieve everything sent over the net and waited for Cantwell to do the erring.

Before Cantwell captured another game, Taylor had taken the fourth set and gone ahead, 3-0, in the last. Cantwell staved off match point twice in the eighth game, before sending one of Taylor's relentless volleys over the baseline to end the 3½-hour match.

Mrs. McCoy Rallies

Mrs. McCoy overcame a 2-3 deficit in the opening set against Miss Bias, rallying to take the next four games. A 24-point sixth game, in which each player had the advantage five times, not only started the winner's rally but seemed to tire the 90-lb. loser.

Tied 1-1 in the second set, Mrs. McCoy put together another streak to take a 4-1 lead. She had to break the game Miss Bias' serve the last two times, however, to win the match.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS

MEN'S SINGLES (finals)—Mack Taylor defeated Frank Cantwell, 1—6, 6—4, 3—6, 6—4, 6—2.

WOMEN'S SINGLES (semifinals)—Mrs. Pearl McCoy defeated Ann Bannick, 9—7, 2—6, 6—3. Finals—Mrs. McCoy defeated Clara Bias, 6—3, 6—4.

MEN'S DOUBLES (semifinals)—Roger Spencer and Mark Haller defeated George Herbert and Dick Leighton, 4—6, 7—5, 6—4; Dr. Aris Carpousis and Awat Buparoek defeated Ray Sherfy and Larry Sherfy, 6—4, 6—2.

WOMEN'S DOUBLES (semifinals)—Sara Moore and Margaret Graham defeated Clara Bias and Frances Bassett, 9—7, 5—7, 6—4.

WOMEN'S CONSOLATION SINGLES (quarterfinals)—Katherine Wassmann defeated Carol Olive, 6—4, 6—3. Semifinals—Mrs. Zabeth Price defeated Julia Forsker, 6—1, 6—4; Christine Morley defeated Wassmann, 6—1, 6—3.

SOME DAY when you're out on the putting green at East Potomac public golf course, keep an eye out for a little white-haired man with a hat and dark glasses.

His name is George Barnard, the "Mayor of East Potomac." You'll know him easily enough, he'll be sinking them or rolling them to within a few inches of the pin from 30 feet out. In the opinion of the pro staff at East Potomac, he's the best putter on the public links.

Barnard has another claim to fame, too. He's probably the only man in history to hit a President of the United States with a golf ball.

Barnard acquired this distinction back in 1921 when he sliced a shot and hit President Warren G. Harding as the latter was playing at East Potomac.

A horde of secret service men charged over to see what kind of a dastardly plot was being made against the President, but after Barnard explained it was an accident, all of them, including President Harding, had a good laugh.

Harding, incidentally, was an ardent golfer and played the publinx course often. A picture of him hung in East Potomac's clubhouse for many years.

Jim Wilson Scores 190-Yard Ace

One of the longest holes-in-one made this year was recorded yesterday at Ft. Dupont public golf course as Jim Wilson aced the 190-yard, par three, sixth hole. It was the first hole-in-one ever made on the hole. Wilson was playing with F. W. Bennett, C. L. Wake, and Bob Hope.

FRUSTRATION: Lee Nichols playing with Joe Humphreyson at Prince Georges, had some hard luck on his tee shot on the tenth yesterday. The shot, badly sliced, hit the women's tee and bounced backward into the swimming pool. After taking a penalty stroke, he was playing three from behind the pool, 40 yards in back of where he started.

EAST POTOMAC and Anacostia public golf courses have a 30-man team match today. It's for the second leg of the S. G. Leoffler trophy, emblematic of the publinx championship. Last year the Hains Point linksmen won a close match and have one leg on the trophy, which must be won three times to be retired. Bill Davis will captain Anacostia and Jack Sayers will captain East Potomac.

Kenwood Golf and Country club is having a pro-am today among the membership with the club's low handicap men serving as "pros."

The long stalemated plan to have a ten-man all-star team from the DGA member clubs meet an all-star team from the publinx received a strong shot in the arm when Prince Georges voted to go along with the plan, if the DGA approved, and offered the use of their facilities for one of the two home-and-home matches. S. G. Leoffler has offered to donate a trophy for the tournament winners.

Keith Kallio, who conceived the idea, hopes to get a sponsor to put up 20 belt buckles with a golf motif on them. Ten would be gold and ten silver, and would be presented to the individual winners of each match.

JIM CURTAIN broke 40 for the first time yesterday using borrowed clubs. He shot a 2-over-par 38 on East Potomac's B course with Harry Thompson's sticks. Lee McKenna also broke 80 for the first time at East Potomac. He's been playing all the publinx for over five years. Another first time 40-breaker is J. Stanley LaCoste, cousin of former world tennis champion Rene LaCoste.

Rene beat Bill Tilden in 1927. Stan used to be a red-hot tennis player himself but has turned to golf as his favorite sport.

Burke's 2-0 Two-Hitter Paces St. Bernadette's

St. Bernadette's defeated Our Lady of Lourdes, 2-0, yesterday at Rock Creek in the first round of the Montgomery County Park and Planning League playoffs.

Dick Burke pitched a two-hitter and struck out 11 for the victors.

Glover Hits Pin On Fly With Approach

Bill Glover literally hit one "on the pin" on the thirteenth hole at Fairfax Country Club. His approach landed right on top of the flag pole, bounced over the green, cut the ball and he didn't even get a par. But the boys around the clubhouse are going to award him a medal as an expert marksman.

Barron will help raise $1,500,000 for a field house and auditorium to be erected on the Georgia Tech campus in memory of the Georgia school's great coach who recently died. The structure will seat 13,000.

Ball Pleased With Condition Of Redskins

Los Angeles, July 29.—Coach Herman Ball of the Washington Redskins relaxed in the dressing room office after a stiff two-hour drill this afternoon and looked at the calendar.

"Just 18 more days," he remarked in his West Virginia drawl, "just 18 more days and we'll have a pretty good idea of what's in store for us this season."

Ball was referring to the Aug. 18 date with the Los Angeles Rams here in the Coliseum, the opening game for both the Redskins and last year's Western Division champions.

"The tough part is over now," Ball continued, "if you can get through the first two weeks in good shape, the rest is comparatively easy. The team's in great physical shape, the rookies are beginning to swing into the system and from now on we can start adding the polish."

After two weeks of intensive drilling, with the emphasis on conditioning, the Redskins swing into their third week of practice with no serious injuries.

Ball tentatively scheduled another "game condition" scrimmage for Tuesday and Saturday of next week.

The backfield rookies who have sparkled the past two weeks include Frankie Spaniel, the Notre Dame iron man; Iowa State's Bill Chauncey; Indiana's Nick Sebek and Penn State's Chuck Drazenovich.

Outstanding among the linemen newcomers have ben Indiana's Casimir Wituckl; Oklahoma A. & M.'s Alex Loyd, a real ruffian who plays end on offense and halfback on defense; Washington State's Jerry Houghton, and Villanova's Danny Brown.

Silver Hill Defeats Marlboro 3-1

Frank Chatterton pitched a four-hit game, hit a double and a single and drove in a run yesterday as he led Silver Hill to a 3-1 victory over Marlboro in a Prince Georges County league game at Sunnybrook.

Greek Ship Noses Lights Up at Monmouth

Post Card Runs Third By 3 Lengths

Monmouth Park, N. J., July 29 (AP).—Brookmeade Stable's Greek Ship this afternoon became the undisputed champion on the Monmouth Park summer meeting when he drove to a narrow nose decision over George D. Widener's Lights Up in the fifth running of the Choice Stakes.

Three lengths farther back came Mrs. Walter M. Jeffords' Post Card, followed by Sunglow, a stablemate of the winner.

The crowd of 23,246 fans was slightly below that of last week which saw the same son of Heliopolis and Boat beat older horses in the Monmouth Handicap at the same distance. The Brookmeade entry paid $6.20 and Greek Ship picked up $19,700 to increase his seasonal earnings to $87,475. Once again it was Joe Culmone in the saddle, the young Sicilian completing a double for the afternoon.

Greek Ship dueled for the lead from the beginning, disposing of Fox Time after slightly more than 6 furlongs, then turning back the bold challenge of Post Card. Soon after straightening into the stretch, Greek Ship was headed by Lights Up, but he displayed extreme gameness to outfinish that one in the final test. The 1¼ miles was covered in 2.03 2/5.

Gap Stable's Singing Sword, paying $110.40, won the first race to start a daily double which was worth $72.00 when J. M. Lee's Dry Run bounded home in the second event. Singing Sword's price was understandable, for he had not been in the money in nine previous starts this year.

Scarborough Racing Shifted Under Lights

Scarborough Downs, Me., July 29 (AP).—The general manager of Scarborough Downs said today the horse racing plant will change from day to night racing next week.

Allan J. Wilson said the decision to turn on lights at Maine's only running horse race track was made at a board of directors' meeting and approved by the State Running Race Commission.

Wilson described the move as one "which might well revolutionize the sport of kings."

Canadian Salmon Just as Game as Florida Bone Fish

By Ralph Murdock

LET'S TAKE a gander at Gander River Lake salmon fishing in Newfoundland. This trip involves Carter Barron, Washington theater executive, and the distinguished dermatologist, Dr. Henry Ford Anderson of the District. Carter and Casey Jones, formerly of The Washington Post, fished in this same area last year but arrived a trifle too early for the salmon. Their '49 batting average was no runs, no hits and no errors.

Murdock

This time, the local anglers left Washington by plane and their first stop was at Gander Airport, the big jumping off airfield for Shannon, London, Helsinki and other points east. There fishermen boarded a "puddle jumper" plane for their camp near Gander River Lake. The area here is a country full of lakes, rapids and falls and has no communications except by planes and canoes.

Nine salmon were taken in six days by our fishing "diplomats" on 4-ounce fly rods. Barron said: "I've fished for bone fish in Florida but a Canada salmon is just as game. They leap from 3 to 6 feet in the air when hooked and make as many as 10 or 12 jumps. Salmon here vary from 3 to 20 pounds although the record for the area is a 41-pounder."

In the ponds the best fishing occurs in water from 4 to 5 feet while only 2-foot depths are necessary in the rapids. The top fish for the locals weighed 7 pounds.

For $17:50 per day, you can get a cabin, food, boat and guides of English descent. The limit is eight salmon per day but one fish a day is a good average. You usually save one out of every four fish snagged. Although the spot is practically a wilderness nothing but fly fishing is allowed—no live bait is permitted. Barron said that the salmon season starts in July but picks up in August when the larger fish are taken.

MR. AND MRS. J. S. CHOATE, 4432 North 16th st., Arlington, Va., and two other anglers baited 41 big hardheads and a mess of spot while night fishing near Clark's Landing in the Patuxent River.

Bluefish are now appearing between Old Cedar Point Lighthouse near Solomon's Island and Point Lookout. Capt. Andy Scheible picked up 93 which averaged over the 1-pound mark. Trolling was the procedure.

A. M. Bryant, who lives on Fort Foot rd. se., and Ben Darby of Piscataway, Md., located the croakers at Rock Point and nailed 52 on frozen shrimp.

"FLINT HILL"

Gentleman's Estate
in Historic Fairfax County, Virginia

Situated at an elevation of 420 feet on 20 fertile acres of pasturage with additional acreage available, this charming brick plantation-type Colonial home, painted in a soft cream shade with white two-storied Southern columned portico is flanked by two wings connected by inclosed arcades and has an overall length of 120 feet; of center hall plan, there are 5 bedrooms, 4½ baths, with a 12-mile view from the east porch. It is within 15 miles of downtown Washington over the fast four-lane Lee boulevard. It is on local bus transportation and near Trailway and Greyhound express stops.

A new elementary school is within walking distance and school buses for the public high school, 1½ miles away, pass the gate. There are two country clubs with excellent golf courses within several miles of the estate. The surrounding countryside lends itself to horseback riding either with the Fairfax Hunt or in the numerous Virginia and Maryland horse shows. The pasturage is completely fenced and cross fenced with a white board paddock fence and is watered by springs forming part of the headwaters of Accotink Creek. There is a four-box stall barn with running water and electricity and a six-room tenant house with heat and bath. The bricks used in the 14-inch solid walls, the hand-hewn beams of the 4,000-book capacity library, the graceful stairway in the wide 12-ft. center hall and the delicate mantels all came from a 138-year-old tavern in the historic town of Fairfax, Va. Navy's Only Woman Captain Has Salty Air

U. S. Navy Photo

WAVES RECRUITS at the Patuxent Naval Air Station are inspected by Capt. Joy Bright Hancock, assistant to the Chief of Naval Personnel for Women. With her are Lieut. Comdr. Gloria Paul and Lieut. Comdr. Conrad Reid. Approximately 100 Waves — including 29 recruits—are taking their indoctrination course at the Patuxent River base. Captain Hancock visits them "whenever I can get away" and also makes frequent inspection trips to WAVES installations throughout this country and in London. She hopes to visit the some 100 Waves in Pearl Harbor within the near future. The Navy also has women officers stationed in Guam and Alaska, but none in Japan or Korea

Falls Church Farm Is Her Home 'Port'

By Norma Lanum

HOW many Navy captains have permanent callouses on their hands from lawn mowers and weed cutters? How many Navy captains grow their own vegetables and cook their own meals?

Better than that, how many Navy captains are in bed by 10 o'clock every night?

Here's one who qualifies on all three counts—Joy Bright Hancock, the Navy's only woman captain and the Waves' only "mustang" from the first World War.

Captain Hancock, now Assistant to the Chief of Naval Personnel for Women, gets her salt-water nickname "mustang" by virtue of rising from the enlisted ranks to become a commissioned officer.

A veteran of two world wars, she enlisted as a yeomanette shortly after her graduation in 1917 from high school in her hometown of Wildwood, N. J. She's served off and on in the Navy ever since—mostly on.

Has a Real Navy Look

CAPTAIN HANCOCK looks surprisingly much like a Navy officer. Her face and arms are tanned and freckled, as if from years on the high seas. She has a determined forward bend to her walk as if she's bucking the ocean gales. And her salutes are as quick and snappy as her smiles.

But the captain's never served at sea. That's something the Navy still leaves to the men.

Although Captain Hancock's first interest is the Navy, her white brick and stone cottage atop a 21-acre hill in Falls Church runs a close second for her devotion.

That's where Captain Hancock mows the grass and cuts the weeds and tends her kitchen garden. That's where she cooks her own meals and spends all her free time.

"You can't drag me away from the farm on weekends," she says with all sincerity. And why not? She designed the house herself. After it was built she planted the two rows of fir trees bordering the driveway "with these two hands," she'll tell you.

Built Her Own Swimming Pool

WHAT'S MORE, she built her own concrete swimming pool—yes, with those same two hands. "I dug the hole myself, throwing the dirt up toward the house to form a terrace," she explains proudly.

By her own admission, Captain Hancock loves to talk about herself. "And I love to fill out long Navy questionnaires about myself," she adds quickly. "But the most fun is having my fortune told. Then I'm the happiest. That's just the kind of person I am."

Captain Hancock lives by herself, unless one counts her frequent house guests, mostly transient Waves. Her house, unmistakeably the residence of a Navy officer, has the touch of a bachelor's house as well.

The long living room has low, heavy wooden beams, ranch-house style, and the walls are of a rough plaster resembling stucco.

Across the large stone fireplace and indoor chimney stretches an enlarged replica of gold Navy wings. Pictures and mementos of Navy friends and relatives are scattered everywhere. Some are of her two late husbands. Both men were Navy fliers and both died in dirigible crashes in the 1920's.

Short Drive to the Office

CAPTAIN HANCOCK'S little farm—she calls it Stony Run—is a scant 20-minute drive from her office in the Navy Department's Arlington Annex. In fact, she chose the site for its proximity.

Twelve years ago Joy Hancock obeyed her doctor's orders to find a place in the country where she could get some rest when off duty. That was when she was a civilian employe of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics.

A Navy friend took her up in a dirigible to scan the countryside for a location far enough away to be peaceful but at the same time accessible. That's how she spotted her hill.

After a short spin in her car, the woman captain is at her desk. It's a small office facing Arlington Cemetery. Water colors and sketches of Navy airplanes are prominent on the walls. There is also a large oil painting of two pretty Waves, a letter dated several years back from President Roosevelt congratulating the Waves on their birthday, and a gold plaque from the citizens of Wildwood citing the captain's outstanding public service.

Captain Hancock is no longer director of the Waves since her women sailors no longer form a separate unit. For the past two years they have been intregrated throughout the whole service, explains the officer. They do men's work, take the same tests for promotions as men take and are governed by the same rules.

Captain Hancock's job is that of adviser on affairs of Navy women. As such, she can take much credit for the new uniforms the women have been wearing since October, 1948.

The skirts are longer, fuller and much more stylish and feminine. But despite her obvious self-assuredness, Captain Hancock claims she feels "awfully conspicious" in her blue uniform with the four gold stripes on the arms.

Prefers an Informal Stance

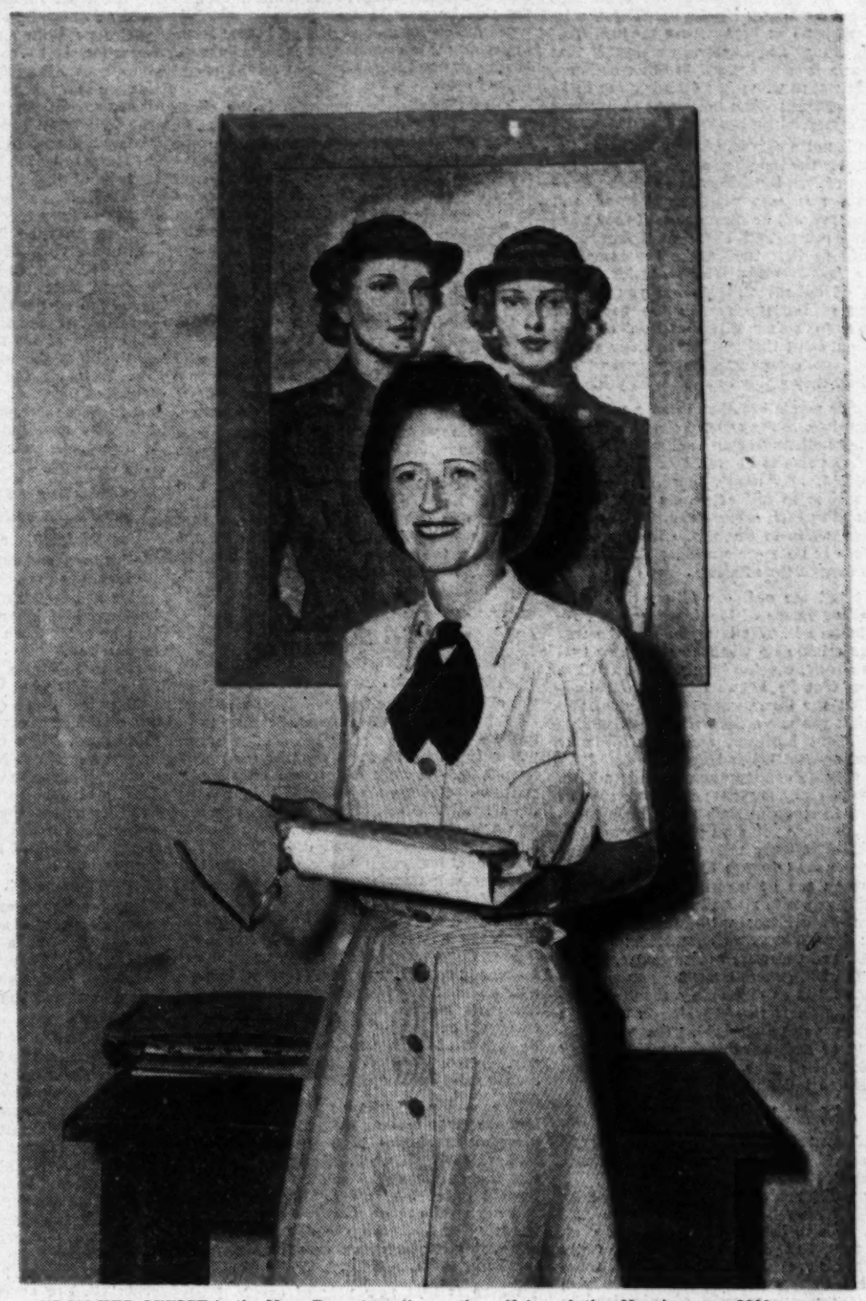
"I FIND that I can talk with someone much better with my hands behind my back," she says with her typically broad grin.

"No," the captain admits with even a broader grin, "I never would have thought I'd be a Navy captain."

Her childhood ambition was to be a criminal lawyer. "I still have a mania for detective stories," she says. "I consume four or five a month."

No other hobbies at present for the captain. "But I'm thinking about taking up golf once more," she says.

"Since I've been swinging that weed cutter I've developed a terrific forearm muscle."



FROM HER OFFICE in the Navy Department's Arlington Annex, Capt. Joy Hancock manages the affairs of the Navy's some 3000 women sailors and 350 officers

CAPTAIN HANCOCK'S JOB as adviser on women's affairs in the Navy demands she keep in close touch with all branches of the service where women are assigned. Conferences are frequent. Here the Captain goes over manpower—womanpower, that is—problems with (from left) Lieut. Jeanne Piper of Lewiston, N. Y.; Comdr. Louise K. Wilde of Concord, N. H., and Lieut. Ellen Uren of Seattle, Wash.

Harris & Ewing Photos

CAPTAIN HANCOCK often drops over to the Waves barracks across the street from her office. Here she stops in the recreation room for a visit with the Master at Arms, Nancy Pickett of Salem, Mass. (center), and Seaman Ethel Ray of Titusville, Fla. Seaman Dolly Kaye of New York City is at the piano

CAPTAIN HANCOCK, twice widowed by Navy dirgible crashes, lives alone in the white brick and stone house she built atop a hill in Falls Church, Va. But she has many houseguests, mostly transient Waves officers. The Captain here is shown chatting on her front lawn with Lieut. Virginia Atkinson (left) of the Navy Department's Bureau of Ships, and Lieut. Florence Erickson who is stationed at the Naval Air Station in Anacostia

LUNCHTIME INEVITABLY finds Captain Hancock in the Navy cafeteria in the building where she works. "I eat everything I can get my hands on," she says

WAVES CAN MAKE UP a neat bunk, too. At the barracks near her office Captain Hancock inspects the living quarters of the enlisted girls with Lieut. C. E. Kleinert. There's one main difference between the girls' bunks and those of the men: Girl sailors have dolls and teddy bears

Even the Self-Sufficient Male Will Succumb to Feminine Flattery

SEVERAL decades ago Rudyard Kipling startled the world by announcing in rhyme that the Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady were sisters under the skin. This statement no longer shocks us. With the insight we have gathered from the works of Freud, Jung and Adler, we know that whether a lady is dressed in mink or lapin, she still smiles when Bob tells her she looks pretty and sulks when he laughs at her new hat.

This is not a characteristic peculiar to the female of the species alone. Admire the muscles of Joe, the fellow at the lathe or of Tom, the man who rows for Harvard, and the response will be the same as if they were identical twins. Tell Peter that you adore his taste in ties; then make the same remark a few evenings later to Chick. Their clucks of delight will remind you of the cackling of the roosters in the barnyard. Intimate to either Mr. Rotarian or the-man-about-town that you never knew a man who had such excellent judgment and observe how they will both swell with pride.

In other words breathes there a man who is impervious to the sweet balm of flattery? We think not! And come to think of it, why not? We all like to be well thought of, to be appreciated, and what's more, to hear it. The world is so full of people who are always tearing each other down, that we naturally gravitate to those who think well of us. There is no more warming fire for the soul to expand than flattery.

Don't tell the ordinary fellow that he is the spitting image of Montgomery Clift. He won't believe it. Tell him you like the way his eyes crinkle up when he smiles, or that he has strong, capable hands. Don't tell Mr. Rotarian that he knows more of world affairs that the Secretary of State does. He will think you are a little silly. But ask his advice about business, and he will know that you respect his judgment.

You may be contemptuous of this advice. Perhaps you may say that you are too sincere a person to stoop to such nasty little feminities. But are you sure you are being fair to yourself and the man in question? Has it ever occurred to you that the same trait in a person can be regarded with two diametrically opposite attitudes? Stinginess can be seen as caution; wastefulness as generosity; boastfulness as confidence; silence as depth, and verbosity as knowledge. If you are a kind and generous person you will see the same traits as desirable rather than undesirable. Who is to say which is true? As Shakespeare so wisely said, "There is nothing good or bad, but thinking makes it so."

Think well of your fellow man, and don't be afraid to tell him so.

Good and Bad Days

"BUT men who boast about their golf scores are bores," we hear you say. "Why should they be encouraged?"

Very well. You've listened to endless tales of the athlete's performance on the golf course. You've heard of the good day when he got all the breaks; when he felt he could putt with his eyes shut and get the ball in the cup; when he made an impossible shot from the rough; when—miracle of miracles—he finally broke 90.

You've also heard of the bad day when nothing worked; he sliced every ball into the rough; he three-putted every green; incredible, but true, he rolled up a score of over a hundred.

But—when the boy friend is discussing his golf game at a party don't be a meanie and mention the high score. How much kinder to give the low one! Mr. Athlete will be more than pleased. He'll beam with pride and affection. Chick remembers that he told you about the higher score, but he will never forget that by your kind words you made him a pro instead of a dud. His golf score is unimportant; what is important is that you made the happy choice of seeing him with the right pair of eyes.

Then there is the man who is the check picker-upper. You've been annoyed that he insists on treating all the time; that no one can buy him a drink; that he tips extravagantly; that he's a sucker for the wares of the cigarette girl; that he orders that extra bottle of wine. Instead of embarrassing him by sly remarks that his friends regard him as a sap, and that anyone can take advantage of him, praise this same quality by saying, "You're awfully good to people, I've never known you to refuse to help a friend."

His generosity can be seen as a fine and noble quality which should be encouraged instead of deprecated. It bespeaks a man who gets pleasure out of giving. Remember this impulse will not end with the courtship days; it will bring many a windfall to your doorstep.

Suppose your date last night was with John who is just the opposite of the spender. You were annoyed at the beginning of the evening because he under-tipped the taxi driver. Because of this you were irritable during dinner. You were convinced that John encouraged you to select the cheapest dishes on the menu. You wanted another cocktail, but you were afraid to order it. After dinner, you noticed again the smallness of the tip he left the waiter.

Other Qualities Involved

THERE is no point to abusing John about his parsimony. Quite frankly, he will not change. By the time you have met him, this characteristic of cautious spending is so much a part of his make-up, that criticism will only offend him and probably end your friendship. "I can't endure a stingy man," you say. But wait a moment! John may have admirable qualities that would make him a worthy husband. True, you may get a vacuum cleaner instead of a bangle for Christmas, but you'll never experience the humiliation of unpaid tradesmen ringing your doorbell. He may take out an insurance policy instead of buying you that fur coat.

Make a virtue of his cautiousness by talking disparagingly of the man who throws his money around; who hasn't learned to save a dime. Be frank in your admiration for the man who looks out for his future; who is careful about money, and has the good sense to save a dollar for that well known rainy day. In this way you can turn stinginess into a virtue and endear yourself to John forever.

Are you the girl who didn't sleep last night because Peter broke a date with you? Your disappointment was keen—you had looked forward to it all week. Peter explained it was the only time he could meet that important client but it didn't stop you from hanging up the receiver with a bang and the words "You inconsiderate dog!" You felt rebuffed and you didn't care if you never saw Peter again.

Where is that new pair of eyes? Look again! Peter's decision to work instead of entertaining you can be seen as ambition. Peter had previously explained to you that his new case needed days and nights of preparation; that he needed every hour to consult with his client and that he hoped in the end to get a substantial verdict. You knew all the details. With the right slant, you could have saved that sleepless night, spared yourself the anguish of feeling rebuffed and had pleasant dreams of Peter's rise with you at his side as the Mrs.

Looking at a habit, trait or characteristic in the most favorable light is only one of many forms of flattery. Another infallible trick for making a male glow warmly in your direction is to compliment him subtly or bluntly on his appearance. Generally speaking we know of no man, be he 20 or 50 who is not as secretly vain of his appearance as the wellknown peacock. All men love to be thought handsome and well-dressed. Don't be taken in by the boy who ruins the press in a pair of trousers to appear slightly disheveled. He's affecting a studied indifference but the vanity is still there.

There may be individual differences but the underlying principle is the same. The snob will want to be complimented on the esoteric taste of his ties; Mr. Pleased-to-Meet-You on the obvious match of his handkerchief, tie and socks; Mr. Athlete on the bold plaid of his sport jacket; Mama's boy on the broad-shouldered drape of his suit and Mr. Wolf on the elegance of his velvet lounging pajamas. Flattery gets under any man's skin and pays big dividends. Compliment a man and watch him spruce up as if he were injected with a large dosage of iron and arsenic.

Watch Your Friends

ASIDE from compliments on his sartorial appointments, a man will be flattered by the attitude and behaviour of your friends. He knows you are the sole source of their reaction and that his stature in their eyes has been moulded by you. From their conversation, he quickly can see what qualities you've emphasized. The following examples can serve to illustrate how a girl can further her cause by what she tells her friends.

Mary is out on a double date and she hears her girl friend exclaim to Tony, the man-about-town, "You must be a big shot and know everybody. Mary tells me there isn't a show in town for which you can't get seats. What a break! I wish John had your pull." Even Tony, the sophisticate is not immune to the girl friend's praise. He knows it was Mary's boasting of his prowess in the battle for the best tickets in town that caused her friend's admiration.

Imagine Tony's chagrin if the turn of the conversation was an amusing anecdote at his expense;—of a lost skirmish with the head waiter. Tony would not only be deflated but ready to wring Mary's neck. Such stupid thrusts in the battle of the sexes must be avoided.

Or as Mary's girl friend, on a different double date, shakes the hand of Mr. Athlete and shrieks with delight, "I really didn't believe you were so strong." Chick is aware that it isn't the handshake that evokes such admiration. It must have been Mary's description of his muscular prowess that made her friend rave. The praise makes him feel like Tarzan and he immediately has a fantasy of swinging dangerously from tree to tree with the beauteous Mary in the crook of his strong arms. Our hero of the tree tops would have reacted very differently if the girl friend had greeted him with the stinging remark "Hi, I've never met a tennis bum before. Why don't you use your mind instead of your muscles? Do you ever give those biceps a rest?"

Feeling like a Mickey Mouse instead of Tarzan, Chick's resentment will make him look elsewhere for his jungle mate.

Or when brother and Mr. Rotarian are enjoying their after dinner cigars, brother timidly asks, "I'm considering branching out in other cities. I'd value your opinion. Mary tells me you've had wide experience in business." Mr. pleased-to-meet-you is so stimulated by brother's flattery that he launches forth on his favorite oration—countless examples of his business acumen and foresight. Running thru his mind during all this is the conviction that Mary is a right smart little woman.

Vanity Is Tricky Issue

VISUALIZE the result if brother had wisecracked about Mr. Rotarian's costly flyer in the market. He trusted Mary with his only financial indiscretion and she betrayed him. It is not the broken confidence but the hurt to his vanity which would kill any desire to see Mary again.

It really isn't too difficult to avoid the uncomplimentary. Every man is made up of many facets. The side of him you encourage will develop with the right praise. Every school teacher is wise to this psychological truth and the first way she woos the problem boy is by flattering him. The magic it accomplishes solves what might be a serious disturbance. Try it yourself on your next date. Then watch the change in your escort as he basks in the admiration you've created.

Try and find a man who will not respond in some degree to a gal who genuinely loves and respects men. Are you one of those females who secretly denounces in her own mind men as being brutish, selfish, predatory animals? Such an attitude communicates itself in a intangible but unmistakable way and men are repelled instead of being attracted. On the other hand, they react favorably to a woman who feels that men are very important in her world and hold a dignified place in the cosmos.

It's no different from the baby's instinctive response to run into one person's arms and to shy away from another's. The baby is no college graduate. He just feels the one person liked and wanted him. It has nothing to do with virtues. The same warmth which attracted the baby attracts the man. A dog will attack a human being because the canine is infuriated by the odor given off by the man's fear. So you will repel the possibilities of friendship with a man if you are distrustful and antagonistic.

Often, we have witnessed the success of the less goodlooking gal and the reason we believe is to be found here. How many times have you wondered what in the world men see in a particular girl? You honestly cannot find the answer in her surface looks. Undoubtedly it lies in her basic femininity; —that she really feels there is no fun like being with a man and that she respects him and trusts his integrity.

A man senses quickly when he's with a shrew who secretly detests men. Don't fool yourself—it's no secret. He's just as smart as the baby or the dog—you can't hide it from him. You have to love them to get them. So, love them, you must.

Now that we are God's children and love all men, there is another pitfall to avoid. Men dislike self-conscious, oversensitive females who are like hawks for discovering mythical slights. Nothing will spoil an evening more than a complaint instead of a greeting. "You are five minutes late. Yesterday, you said you'd call at 6 and you called at 7. Last time we were together I had a headache and when you called, you didn't even inquire if it was better!" ad infinitum. You are implanting in his mind the possibility that he holds you lightly or how else could he be such a brute. And you sound like a petulant, spoilt child.

Beware of Slights

BEWARE of making these imaginary slights a reality to him. Learn as you must in every bypath of life to have a proper sense of value. We are not talking about the basic responsibilities a gal must demand from a man. It's not the quick match to your cigarette that we're interested in, it's the flame that will light the home fires.

No one and especially a man who grapples with pesky problems all day in his business, enjoys the company of a female who is forever recounting her troubles. True he may be sympathetic and helpful at the first five narrations, but after that resentment quickly followed by boredom sets in. Even if your complaints are physical and be's the hypochondriac type, it's his migraine headaches or ulcers he wants to talk about. No one, not even your best girl friend, enjoys being depressed or bored by your troubles. You are abusing the privilege of any relationship by continually "using it." Be realistic—man was created in God's image, but he hasn't His characteristics. All people try to avoid the unpleasant—don't be one of those gals whom the world shuns like the plague.

This business of getting a husband is not easy. You must make the necessary sacrifices if there's a thorn in your side, keep that unappealing fact to yourself. Businessmen have been known to make greater sacrifices to achieve success in their field of endeavor. Time and time again we come back to the idea that in order to get, you must give. Too often we avoid facing the painful facts of our personalities. It is easy to distort a situation to our own satisfaction, but if you want to be a graduate of our school, the pain of such fact-facing has got to be tolerated. Take a look into that mirror of reality—if you've been giving off sour grapes, change it to a mellow wine which will be more palatable.

Yes, they are all brothers under the skin when it comes to flattery. Neither worldly, physical nor intellectual attainments quench the universal thirst for praise. Whether you admire his tie, or convert a possible fault into a positive virtue—whether you subtly convey an undeniable female response to his maleness or listen tirelessly to detailed reports of his business woes is for you to decide.

What you must keep in mind is the importance of flattery as a technique in wooing a man. It is the alchemy that transforms the most recalcitrant into the most supplicating. Have you not witnessed the truth of this all your life? All of us, male and female respond to people who find us pleasing. We begin by warming up and end by being exceedingly fond of anyone who flatters us. We respect their good judgment and an onus is put upon us not to disappoint their faith.

So don't be niggardly with your praise. A man needn't be perfect for you to envelop him with the warmth of your praise. Pick out his outstanding virtue and play it up. Let his shortcomings alone—if possible—forever. Remember the great psychological truth in encouraging the positive and noble side of a man. If you do, it will grow until it becomes the predominant facet of his nature. Flatter him and his heart and hand are yours for the taking and we mean the mighty and the puny, the brainy and the dopes; the hirsute and the bald, the sophisticate and the naive. Flattery is the Achilles' heel of the reputedly superior sex.

Charm School for Men

Shy Bachelors Taught Potency of Larynx

By Vernon Butler

Atlanta, July 29 (AP).—You shy bachelors who haven't been making much headway with the gals should acquire a "flexible larynx."

Nothing so drastic as throat surgery is required. You can get yours adjusted by three lovely instructors who supervise the "techniques for attracting women" course at the Atlanta Academy of Charm.

Doris Waters, Dotty Ledford and Ruth Harris—a blonde, brunette and redhead, respectively—have a lot of other ideas besides the larynx business. Enough, in fact, for 15 lessons.

For instance: A really smooth worker doesn't say, "You look wonderful today," to his girl friend. The charming charm school teachers say that remark implies that she looked terrible other days. Instead, he says, "You're always so lovely, Dear," in a low, caressing voice.

It's also a good idea, the girls advise, to make a woman feel that she is something of an enigma. Even if you have a whale of an ego, don't let your one and only think you can read her like a book.

Just sneak up on her with a softly spoken bell-ringer like this: "There's something mysterious about you, sweetheart, something that's hard to understand—."

See what we mean about the flexible larynx?

Guide the Male

WHEN they have satisfied themselves that his subtle compliments are properly modulated, the girls guide an awkward male gently through such complex matters as proper dress (fat men should avoid the rougher fabrics), posture (women don't like men who slouch), color harmony, style sense, poise, personality, charm and—whoops—use of "dangerous" and "alluring" masculine perfumes.

Another point emphasized by the charm school specialists is the "keep-a-woman-wondering" technique. They maintain it's better to make a girl wonder why you DIDN'T kiss her. On this point there is some disagreement between students and teachers. Some of the more advanced pupils feel that the woman can wonder just as well about something else.

Miss Harris, who is director of the academy, says the course, which lasts 7½ weeks, is so new that few have completed it. But she is confident that her pupils will derive considerable benefit "if the men will really apply the things we are trying to teach them."

No "Brakes" Course Yet

SHE says the staff hasn't encountered any real wolves in student's clothing since the course was begun.

The school has made no provision for putting on the brakes in case the medicine is too potent and their graduates are swamped by bevies of southern belles. Such action may be necessary, though, if a letter writer who signed himself "Shades of Adonis" can be believed.

This man wrote the academy he wanted a course teaching eligible males how to fight off the girls. He wished the school well in its present endeavor because he felt there might be safety in numbers.

It may be the school will have to initiate a course to help the girls counter the souped-up techniques of their aspirants to the bachelor of love degree.

Korea Revives War Memories for Mrs. Romulo

By Marie McNair

SIX years ago Mrs. Carlos Romulo was hiding in the jungles of Luzon. War raging now in Korea close to her homeland, has recalled certain nerve-racking experiences to the wife of the Philippine general who heads the United Nations General Assembly.

Mrs. Romulo knows what it is to have her world come crashing down on her head. She fled with her two younger sons—Dick and Bobby, into the hills, the Japs always close behind. The older boys Carlos, jr.—Mike to family and friends—and Gregorio had joined up to fight with the guerillas.

Their father, who had been editor and publisher of a group of Manila newspapers, was in combat as aide-de-camp to Gen. Douglas MacArthur in Bataan, Australia and Corregidor.

Like hunted things Mrs. Romulo and her children moved from village to village for eight months, taking a new name at every refuge. To 3-year-old Bobby it was difficult to explain the consequences of one misstep.

Names Prove Confusing

INTERROGATIONS were frequent. So many names to remember were confusing to the child's already confused mind He would hide his father's picture if anyone came to the house. But finally one day he went to his mother, "I think I'll just say his name is Daddy", he informed her. And it worked!

There was no going back for the Romulos. Everything was gone in Manila. Five years ago the family were reunited when Mrs. Romulo came to Washington for the first time, the wife of the Philippine Resident Commissioner.

Here life began anew in a house on Garfield st., where Mrs. Romulo has built a Philippine room—tiled like a Manila patio, furnished with rattan furniture with island reminders in the delicate wood carvings of water buffalo and birds indigenous to her land.

The bar and a television set are the two concessions to twentieth century America.

Family Follows Normal Pursuits

MOST of the time you will see Mrs. Romulo smartly turned out in American or French designed frocks. She wears the elaborate "Mesteza" dress, of delicately embroidered pina cloth only for formal official occasions.

Carlos is back in Manila finishing his law course. Gregorio is doing graduate work at Georgetown University in foreign service. Bobby, now 11, is in the seventh grade at Calvert School, and Dick, wears the uniform of St. John's Military Academy where he'll be a senior come fall, and perhaps, editor of the school paper. And Mrs. Romulo is counting the days when the general, now in Manila, will return for the opening of the General Assembly in September.

Then she'll go back with him to the Philippines for as long as his duties as Secretary of Foreign Affairs will keep him there.

Mrs. Pepper Visits Copenhagen

MRS. CLAUDE PEPPER, wife of the Florida Senator, can tell you how it feels to be on top of the world. She was there. Just back from a European trip, Mildred Pepper flew over the tip-top point of the globe into the midnight sun, an experience she won't soon forget.

With Tobe Davis, who has a style school in New York, Mrs. Pepper left on 24 hours notice from New York bound by plane for Paris. At the Hotel Athenee they ran into William Batt, who lived in Washington during the war years when he headed WPB. By plane they took off for Copenhagen where "it's peaceful, clean and the people are gentlefolk." Our lady Ambassador, Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, is doing a wonderful job there, Mrs. Pepper heard from everyone. She was quick to learn the Danish language and pleased the natives tremendously by giving an Independence Day speech in Danish on July 4.

Flowers Huge and Brilliant

THE Swedish crystal, Norway's priceless porcelains, made Mildred Pepper yearn to bring some home. The flowers in Norway defy description, says Mildred, for the cool, damp climate seems to make them grow larger and brighter than anywhere else.

It was midnight in Norway when they boarded a Viking ship for a five-hour nonstop flight into the land of the midnight sun. Flying over Lapland the sun suddenly appeared like a huge ball of fire out of nowhere. As the plane circled the apex a Norwegian supper was served—an entree of smoked reindeer meat; Thorn Lake white fish caviar, Lapland salad, Norrland potatoes, goat cheese and Grotto Kebnekaisa, an ice cream dessert named for Lapland's highest mountain peak.

Senator Pepper was at the airfield to meet the wayfarers when they landed in New York. Later, the Peppers were guests of former Ambassador to Moscow, Lieut. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith aboard his yacht based at Governors Island.

The Service Set

Military Families Feel Impact of Conflict in Korea

By Elizabeth Maguire

WHILE guns boom in Korea, all's quiet on the service social front in Washington. "We're spending the first summer in 11 years away from our summer home . . . Everything has slowed down because the men work so late . . . Parties are informal, the women in short dresses, men in uniforms . . . We're staying here right on the job all summer . . ."

Such are comments from wives of generals, admirals, and every rank of the military. War strikes at everyone but it strikes first at those whose lives are dedicated to preserving the safety of their country.

Mrs. Hoyt Sanford Vandenberg, wife of the Chief of Staff, USAF (and one of the best looking women in Washington) is staying in town. Mrs. Forrest P. Sherman, wife of the Chief of Naval Operations, is letting breezes through the old trees on Observatory Circle substitute for cooler breezes at the seashore.

And Mrs. Francis P. Matthews, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, has given up all thought of going to Glendaloch, their summer place at Ely, Minn. The house is on Lake Burntside, she says, almost on the Canadian border in the cool north woods. Her daughter, Miss Marguerite Matthews, is spending the summer there, with her aunt, Mrs. E. M. Kavanagh.

Take Each Day As It Comes

"WE'RE staying in town, taking each day as it comes," says Mrs. J. Lawton Collins, wife of the Chief of Staff of the U. S. Army.

The wife of the Secretary of Defense, Mrs. Louis Johnson, is spending most of her time in Washington, although she has kept her house open in Clarksburg, W. Va. Mrs. Stephen Early, wife of the Deputy Secretary of Defense, is spending all summer in Washington, and so is Mrs. Omar N. Bradley, wife of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Perhaps because of sudden expansion at Marine Barracks, Mrs. Clifton Bledsoe Cates, wife of the commandant, has left town for a short vacation up North with her daughter, Anne. After a visit at Nantucket, the two will go to Prouts Neck, Me.

The wife of the Secretary of War, Mrs. Frank Pace, jr., is going away tomorrow with her two children until after Labor Day, to be with her mother, Mrs. Walter C. Janney, at Wood's Hole, Cape Cod. Mrs. Thomas K. Finletter, wife of the Secretary of the Air Force, is dividing her time this summer between Washington and Bar Harbor, Me.

Maj. Gen. Oliver Prince Smith, USMC, and Mrs. Smith and their very pretty daughter, Mrs. Charles C. Benedict, jr., arrived last Tuesday at Camp Pendleton, Calif., where Gen. Smith is to be in command of the First Division. Just two months ago Mrs. Smith looked forward to their new post as a quiet spot in California. Now the place is teeming.

Popular British Couple to Leave

MEANWHILE, Washington is sorry to say good-bye to Admiral Sir Frederick and Lady Dalrymple-Hamilton, who are returning on August 9 to their home in West Scotland. The Admiral has been on duty here as head of the Navy Staff of the British Joint Services Mission, and he is being replaced by Admiral the Hon. Sir Cyril Douglas Pennant.

The Dalrymple-Hamiltons live in Stranraer, Scotland, a terminal point for channel boats going from Scotland to North Ireland. Their home is on a loch called Ryan, a pretty spot, rimmed by woods with a big moor behind.

News from the jungles of Malaya states that Capt. Simon Bland is in good order fighting in their depths. "Like all soldiers, he enjoys himself when in the midst of trouble," was the casual comment from Capt. Bland's former office at the British Joint Services Mission.

One of Washington's bachelors, Lieut. Mark Thornehill, is going back with the Dalrymple-Hamiltons. And so are Capt. and Mrs. Ronald Owen. Capt. Horace Lyddon will replace Captain Owen at the office here.

Capt. William Kenner, USCG, and Mrs. Kenner entertained last evening at a cocktail buffet party at their home in Alexandria.

Capt. and Mrs. B. W. Hogan have arrived in Washington from the West Coast. Captain Hogan will be commanding officer at the Naval Medical School at Bethesda, Md. In California he was commanding officer of the Naval Hospital at Mare Island, With their three children, Bart Hogan, jr., a student at Georgetown Prep, Thomas Hogan, age 12, and Mary, 4, the Hogans have settled down in a house on Centre st., in Chevy Chase.

Miss Constance Reed Du Bois Married to Air Force Officer

THE Chevy Chase Baptist Church yesterday was the scene of the marriage of Miss Constance Reed Du Bois and Lieut. Robert Adair Hansen, with the Rev. Edward O. Clark officiating.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Bache Du Bois of Chevy Chase, Md., and her husband is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Hansen of Minneapolis, Minn.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of nylon tulle and lace. Her veil was of French illusion with lace and she carried a crescent bouquet of white roses, stephanotis and babies' breath.

Miss Jane Ruth Swain attended the bride as maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Gwendolyn Powell Davies, Miss Mary Caroline Robinson and Miss Barbara Johnson.

Edward A. Weiland served the bridegroom as best man and the ushers were Capt. Fred D. Van Valkenburg, USAF; Lieut. Robert S. Slizeski, USAF; Lieut. Robert E. Owen, USAF; and George B. Du Bois, jr.

Following a reception at the Officer's Club of the Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, the couple left for a wedding trip to Canada. On their return they will reside at Olmsted Air Force Base in Middletown, Pa., where Lieutenant Hansen is stationed.

The bride is a graduate of Holton Arms School and Vassar College. Her husband is a graduate of the United States Military Academy.

Watching the Government's Wheels Go 'Round

Capital Is a Practical Lab For 24 College Girls Serving In U. S. Bureaus and Offices

By Sonia Stein

For six weeks this summer, Washington has been a big "lab" for a group of Wellesley College students of political science. Twenty from Wellesley and 4 from Smith and Vassar, have been working as unpaid help, "interns," in a number of Government offices, better to understand the form of government they have studied so diligently in their academic halls.

The girls, all about to enter their senior year, are accepted for the internships on a basis of grades, interest, adaptability, maturity and suitable personality.

"The girl who thinks she is going to come here and teach the bureaucrats a thing or two, isn't permitted to try," according to Owen S. "Pete" Stratton, assistant professor of political science at Wellesley, who conducts the program. "They are presumably here to learn, and we choose girls with open minds."

Must Pay Own Expenses

Although the internships cost the girls money since they pay their own expenses, there are more candidates than openings. Since the law prohibits anyone doing work which would otherwise be done by a paid employee, the girls are usually offered nice assignments—no routine filing for them. Two girls in the Office of Education of the Federal Security Agency interviewed visiting German school teachers and prepared a report. A Wellesley girl from Beirut, Lebanon, who is an outstanding chemist, got a wonderfully exciting assignment at the National Cancer Institute. Some of the girls have spent part of their six weeks at a woman's prison and at St. Elizabeth's. The student assigned to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, spent several days at a Cherokee reservation.

Another girl, an art major, worked at the National Gallery of Art, a paid job, incidentally, since the gallery cannot permit anyone in without a pass, and can give passes to none but paid employes.

Work for Major Parties

Not all of the jobs are directly under the Federal Government. One girl worked for the Democratic National Committee, another for the Republican Committee. One youngster was "leg man" for Jerry Kluttz, The Washington Post columnist who writes about Government. Three girls worked for Senators.

On Monday and Tuesday nights, a guest speaker from one of the Government agencies gives the girls a glimpse into the practical workings of the theories they've studied. After the dinner and the talk, questions, questions, questions.

"We set an arbitrary stopping time of 10:30 or they'd go on forever," Mr. Stratton says.

The questions are by no means naive, as the speakers can tell you. The girls know what's what and don't hesitate to bait the speaker. The night a representative of the Republican National Committee spoke, the girl who works with the Democratic National Committee was not able to be present. "She was furious afterward, when she heard what the speaker had said. And she proceeded to spiel off the questions she'd have asked if only she'd been there," Mr. Stratton's wife remembers.

Twenty-six-year-old Mrs. Stratton looks with affection on her "24 children" and both she and her husband feel the girls have extraordinary aptitude for getting along with people and profiting by their opportunity to get close to the Government.

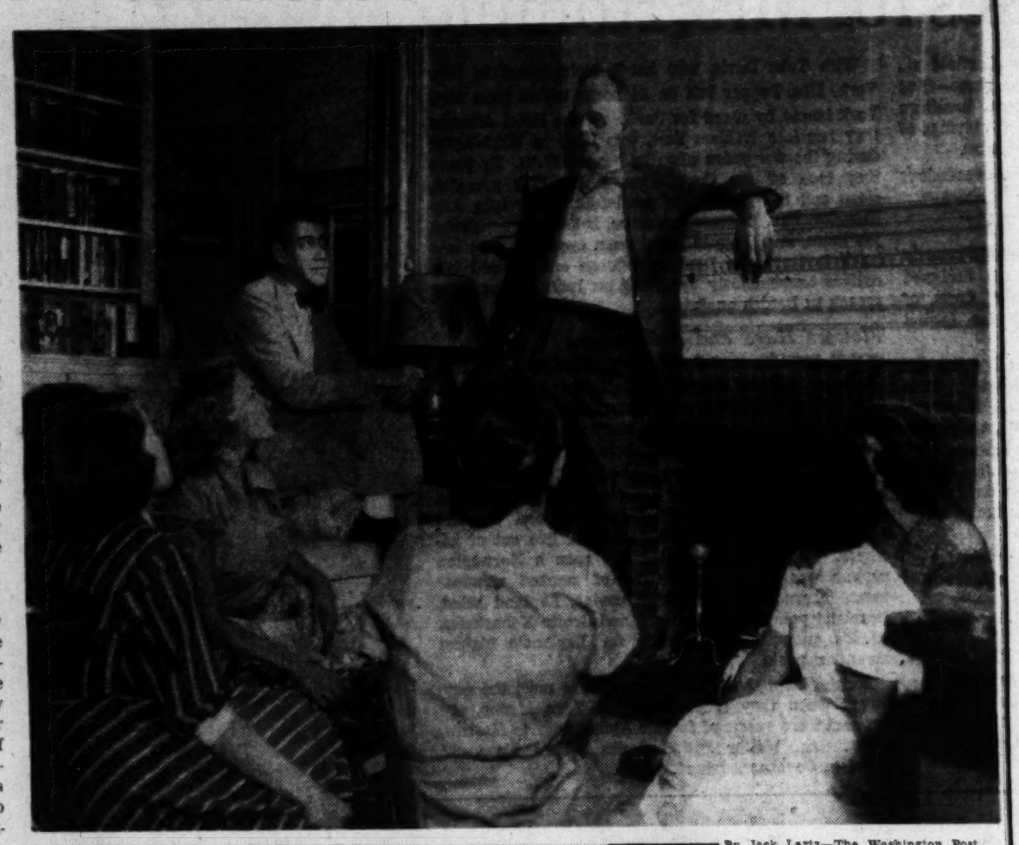
But Mrs. Stratton also recalls how astonished and exhausted the girls were at the end of their first eight-hour day, as well as the girl who is so used to wearing blue jeans and socks on campus that she couldn't get used to wearing nylons every day and ruined 14 pairs of stockings in six weeks.

Outgrowth of War Project

The project, now in its third summer, started as a wintertime program when Wellesley closed down for two months during the war to save fuel. Julia Henderson of Wellesley, who is now with the United Nations, found Government jobs in manpower-shy Washington for many of the girls for those two months. From that experience, which seemed to yield much to both employer and student, was born the short summer internship.

"Anybody who has ever worked in Government is struck with how artificial it is to teach political science in words," Mr. Stratton explains. "Students have to see it operate to understand it thoroughly," he adds. As a former employe of the OPA, the Bureau of the Budget, the Fire Guard Forest Service at Salmon National Forest and a Government highway construction job, in reverse order, Mr. Stratton has seen it operate at all levels and his experience in Washington helps him find jobs that fit his student interns.

Would they do it again if they could? The eyebrows go up in astonishment. "Of course, but I wish it could be for longer."



By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post.

Members of a Wellesley College "intern" group, studying government at close range by taking unpaid jobs in Government offices, spend many evenings listening to talks by officials who indulge in "off-the-record" stories. No gobbledegook allowed in these sessions. Here Rufus E. Miles, jr., Bureau of the Budget, discusses money matters with the Wellesley interns. At left, on arm of chair, is Prof. Owen S. Stratton, assistant professor of political science at Wellesley, who shepherds the group in Washington for the six-week summer session

By Joe Armstrong—The Washington Post.

Next Tuesday a class in speech and dramatics will start at the Rehoboth Art League for both adults and children. These classes will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays, the juniors from 2 to 4 p. m. and the grown-ups grom 8 to 10 p. m.

Degree in speech and dramatics from Temple University. He has taught these subjects in the Overbrook School for the Blind, and will instruct next winter at the University of Pennsylvania Hearing Center.

The Art League board met Tuesday afteroon at The Homestead in Henlopen Acres and selected a nominating committee for the election of officers and directors for next year. This is "presidential election year" as the term of Miss Ann B. Hazzard expires, as will that of a number of other officers and three directors.

Willis of Chevy Chase, whose family has bought the summer cottage of Mrs. Lucien Chase at Columbia ave. and 2d st., will be chairman of hostesses tomorrow at the Sunday tea in the Corkran Studio. Private Showing Launches Exhibit

A boardwalk attraction this week was the private viewing and tea in the clubhouse of the Village Improvement Association, Wednesday at 3 p. m., launching the clubwomen's twenty-second annual art exhibition, which opened to the public Thursday and will remain hanging through August.

Another big attraction for lovers of antiques will be staged for the summer crowd on August 12. This is the first annual Antiques Fair of All Saints' Episcopal Church, to be held in the large parish house on Olive ave. a half-block from the boardwalk.

In connection with the fair, women of the parish will give a luncheon in the open courtyard of the church. The fair is planned as a benefit for the church as well as to select patrons who are interested in antiques. Well-known dealers are being invited to put on the show. Mrs. Mae Hall McCabe and Mrs. Thomas M. Sloane are handling advance arrangements.

The annual bal masque of the Rehoboth Art League is already shaping up with the appointment of the ball committee. To be held at the Rehoboth Beach Country Club around th end of August or the first week in September, the steering committee is trying to decide on an appropriate theme for the costume dance, with one being considered, "The Mid-Century Ball."

This year's committee consists of three women of the nearby breakwater town of Lewes, Mrs. Mervyn L. Lafferty, Mrs. Gilbert M. Wiltbank and Miss Adele Chambers.

VANITY PATTERN 6104

SUCCESS story of the bare-shoulder fashions can be read any day or night wherever the sun-and-fun-loving set gather. It's a story illustrated by smoothly tanned shoulders rising from foam-white cottons, by slim, trim romantic bodices, and billowy skirts. The moonlight or sunlit versions, alike, are cottons preferred—suitable in organdy, eyelet pique, voile, broadcloth, gingham—with emphasis, of course, on the colors that add glamour to sun-tan.

In this spirit of gaiety, Vanity Pattern 6104 is designed for day or evening and includes a stole, reminiscent of Victorian days—flirtatious as a fan. The neckline of the bodice is softened by two little triangular wings which can be worn turned upward toward the shoulders or folded crisply back. The skirt adheres to the new short length for evening. Make is as short as you like for daytime.

Vanity Pattern 6104 comes in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16 dress, dance length, and stole require 5⅞ yards of 39-inch fabric and 1½ yards of contrast.

In India Pilau Surpasses Curry as Most Popular Dish

By R. Satakopan

New Delhi, July 29 (AP).—Take a seat on the floor and limber up your fingers: we've got pilau for dinner tonight.

Pilau is India's most generally popular dish. Most everybody knows about India's curry and rice, but that's only one feature of Indian cuisine, not the principal national dish.

Of course, Indians have all kinds of foods and all kinds of recipes just as Americans and Europeans and other peoples do. However, there is one basic element you'll find in Indian cooking from Travancore in the south to East Punjab in the north. That's rice.

Pilau is cooked with rice. In the south, it's so spicy you expect smoke to come out of your mouth. In the north you can keep cool while munching.

Cut Chicken In Small Pieces

TO PREPARE pilau in the South Indian fashion, cut one pound of mutton or chicken into small pieces and boil in ghee (that's clarified butter—the Indian equivalent of cooking fat) for about five minutes. Then add spices ground into a paste—poppy seeds, coconut, ginger, onion, cardamon, tumeric, cinnamon, garlic, and fresh green chili powder. Remove the vessel from the stove.

Place one pound of rice in a separate vessel with an equivalent quantity of water. When the rice is half-boiled, add clarified butter. When three - quarters boiled, add the meat preparation, mix well and place a plate of hot coals on top of the vessel while keeping the fire going below. Remove when well cooked, but keep the vessel closed to preserve the flavor. Before serving, sprinkle with chopped almonds and cashew nuts.

That, in most cases, is the complete menu. You sit on the floor, cross-legged, while the lady of the house places a broad banana leaf before you. That is the plate. Normally, you will look in vain for utensils. You've got fingers, haven't you?

Condiments Served on Side

FOR side dishes and condiments there are small servings of fried fish, boiled eggs, pickles and curd and onions.

When there is a sweet—dessert to the American—it's usually payasam. To make this, take half pound vermicilli or cracked wheat. Roast it in clarified butter until brown. Then slowly add milk and sugar. When the vermicilli is well cooked, remove and add pieces of almond and raisins, previously roasted in clarified butter.

Ask Anne

It's the Six-Six Club That Brings Tall Girls And Boys Together

DEAR ANNE:

A young friend of my family is very tall and I believe she would be interested in the club for young folks 6 feet and over. Could you advise correct name of the club, where it can be reached, and any other facts possible in connection with its operation?

Jimmy, Silver Spring, Md.

There's a Six-Six Club here, membership in which is limited to tall people between 21 and 40. The girls must be 5 feet 10 inches (minus shoes!) or over and the boys must be 6 feet 2 inches (or taller). You must be single to join. (The widowed and divorced are eligible but in the latter case, you must have your final papers.) The club meets twice a month in the winter time, at 1322 Vermont ave. nw. In the summer members go in for such outdoor activities as boat trips and picnics, on a more infrequent basis. There's a waiting list for membership, I understand. For more information, call the membership chairman, Ruth Von Brandt, at Wisconsin 6926.

DEAR ANNE:

Where can I purchase ready-made slipcovers for maple sofa and chair in a solid color? To date, all I have found have been of floral design.

F. B. W., Annapolis, Md.

I assume, when you ask for slipcovers for maple furniture, that you mean cushion covers, since none of the ready-made covers available here will cover the wood surface of the average maple sofa or chair.

Solid colors in cushion slipcovers are elusive, as you've found. However, there are several non-floral prints available in Washington. One store at 8th and D sts. nw., carries knitted covers in a textural weave with the effect of solid colors. At present, the stock is limited in choice of color, however, another store at 4500 Wisconsin ave. stocks a cotton print cover in a block pattern, with three color combinations to choose from. Still another department store at 8th and E streets has a zig-zag pattern in cretonne, as well as an assortment of the knitted variety.

DEAR ANNE:

About a year and a half ago, there was much in the papers about the injurious effects of flour 'bleached' with agene—and I believe Congress passed a law prohibiting its use. As a result I have been looking for 'unbleached' flour to return to the grocery stores but it is still almost impossible to find. What has happened to that non-bleach law? Also what sort of preparations do commercial bakeries use to keep their bread soft, and is this another product harmful to one's health?

H. R. K., 1705 37th st. n.w.

You are quite right about the action of Congress in passing a law prohibiting use of agene as a bleach in flour. However, other harmless bleaches are still permitted under the law, and that is why you still find so much bleached flour on the grocers' shelves.

One reason for the prevalence of this type of flour is its popularity with the average housewife, and another reason is that it keeps better on grocer's shelves. Several stores here do carry a special unbleached flour, but none have any in stock right now. I was told at one that they do not have it in warm weather because it's so attractive to weevils.

The Food and Drug Administration reports that commercial bread softeners are apparently non-injurious, although research is still under way.

Anne answers questions through her column only. Address letters to "Anne," Room 408, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C. Names and addresses of questioners will be used, unless specifically requested otherwise.

Tobé Says...

Exercise Judgment

When I ask "Do you know who you are and what you want to be?" it's not as silly as it sounds. For I find that the trouble with most women who have clothes problems is that they do not look at themselves and their daily lives with honest eyes. Therefore their judgment is apt to be faulty and they make many unnecessary mistakes in clothes.

First mistake is to think you must follow fashion blindly. Certainly when you buy a new costume you want it to be fashion right. But if it does not fit the needs of your daily life, then it is the wrong thing for you to wear, no matter how smart it is judged by current fashion standards.

Miss Brugh, D. H. Lavezzo, Are Married

MRS. DANIEL LAVEZZO, JR.
. . . married at country home

Miss Mary Stuart Brugh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Kanaga Brugh of Bia Yuka near Hagerstown, Md., and Daniel Harry Lavezzo, jr., of New York City, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Harry Lavezzo of Greenwich, Conn., were married July 28 at 4:30 p. m. at the country home of the bride's parents. The Rev. Dr. Scott R. Wagner of Hagerstown performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate families.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore her mother's wedding gown of eggshell satin and heirloom lace. The gown was fashioned with a lace bodice, long sleeves and a full skirt of satin and chiffon. On her head she wore a coronet of heirloom rose point lace, and she carried a bouquet of white orchids. Miss Anne Spencer Brugh was her sister's maid of honor.

Mrs. Lavezzo is a graduate of the Warrenton Country School, Warrenton, Va., and Barmore College, New York City. Her maternal grandparents are Dr. and Mrs. E. C. Stuart of Winchester, Va., and she is a niece of Mrs. William H. Singer and the late Mr. Singer of Laren, Holland, and Olden, Norway. Mrs. Singer, a native of Hagerstown, is donor of the Washington County Museum of Fine Arts in Hagerstown.

Mr. Lavezzo is a graduate of the Riverdale School, Riverdale-on-the-Hudson. The couple will make their home in New York City.

L'Enfant Descendant Honored

Miss Denise L'Enfant will help celebrate her great-great-grand-uncle's 196th birthday Tuesday night along with hundreds of other people who are expected to attend a memorial concert honoring Pierre L'Enfant, designer of the City of Washington. Miss L'Enfant, who now works with the French tobacco buying commission in Baltimore, has also been a resident of Washington, working with the French Supply Commission.

One of the special silver Sesquicentennial Medals struck at the United States Mint was presented to Miss L'Enfant Friday evening at the French Chancery by Lawrence B. Slater, assistant general manager of the Sesquicentennial.

She will be a guest of the French Ambassador at Tuesday's concert when the Hector Berlioz "Requiem" is presented for the first time in Washington.

Miss L'Enfant was born and raised in France, where her father, Eugene Armand L'Enfant, was a famous general and an explorer. But she had always wanted to visit the United States, partly because the work of her great-great-granduncle had been often discussed at home, and partly because her mother's father was an American from the city of Hoboken, N. J. She is now a permanent resident of the United States.

Architects, Builders Team Against Monotony

THE HOME building industry is continuing its war on monotonous design in housing.

The goal: an extensive variety of floor plans, exteriors, colors and designs in mass-produced homes. The housing development where every home is exactly the same, like peas in a pod, is on its way out, reports the National Association of Home Builders.

The NAHB and the American Institute of Architects are making arrangements to provide the field of small home design with the best architectural services available, it was revealed yesterday.

Builders and architects in key cities over the Nation are sitting down together to work out the problems involved. These teams will promote the utilization of architectural services by merchant builders on a mutually satisfactory basis.

Daniel, Pennell Confer

CLARKE DANIEL, president of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, and Howell B. Pennell, architect, have begun a study for Washington and Philadelphia.

Builders and architects are doing the same in St. Louis; Buffalo, N. Y.; Fort Worth, Texas; Miami; Kansas City, Mo.; Boston; Chicago; Los Angeles; and Seattle, Wash.

"Small home construction has become an enormous industry within the last four years," Thomas P. Coogan, of Miami, NAHB president, pointed out yesterday. "Mass productio provides housing at lowest possible costs. However, it needs the best architectural services it can secure. They are not available now.

"Builders have been criticized for lack of good design in their mass produced homes," Coogan added. "We want to improve our product. The standard architectural fee, however, has been too high for the majority of builders."

"We are going to explore the entire field of architectural usage. We hope to educate architects, builders, bankers, government housing agencies and the home buying public to the wonderful possibilities for better housing in this field."

Both builders and architects believe the fee scale can be worked out on a local level provided adequate allowance in mortgage commitments is made for com lete architectural services.

The architect-builder teams have been furnished with a proposed agenda. They will meet with other local architects and home builders for discussions of mutual problems.

October Meeting

THE entire AIA and NAHB committees will then meet in October at the National Association of Home Builders fall board of directors' meeting in Houston, Texas.

Major subject on the agenda is the handling of an entire subdivision by an architect, from conception of the project to its completion.

This would include land planning, unit planning, exterior design, color control, display drawings, extensive supervision, participation in FHA, VA and bank conferences and close collaboration with the builder in any proposed changes in floor plans during construction stages.

Also up for discussion are the use of architects in the various types of home building operations now under way. These would include the large-scale producer, small-scale producer, the contractor who bids on architect-designed single homes, and the prefabricator.

The net result of the conferences is expected to be a better house for the money for the prospective home buyer.

Permit Issued

A permit for construction of nine one-story houses has been issued to the Truden Co., Inc., 1025 Connecticut ave. nw. The homes will be built in the 3400 block of Wake dr., Kensington, Md.

January-June

Home Boom Hits All-Time Record Here

MORE dwelling units were started in Greater Washington in the first six months of this year than any other January-to-June period in history.

According to preliminary estimates of the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, a total of 13,190 new homes and apartments were put under construction in the first half of 1950.

This is a gain, the bureau announced yesterday, of nearly one-third over the same period in 1949.

The record building rate has been paced this year by an "extraordinary" amount of single-family house construction, "far outdoing apartment building," the bureau reported.

Of all new dwellings started during the first six months of 1950 in Greater Washington,' single-family houses accounted for 80 percent. In the comparable period of last year, single-family homes made up only 38 percent of all dwellings put under construction.

Housing starts in June, according to the bureau, totaled 3120 units—a 20 percent gain over May. While the total June volume was about the same as that of the same month in 1949, the number of one-family houses started last month—2540—also was a new record.

Privately-owned, one-family houses cost more to build in the first half of 1950 than they did in the same months of 1949, it was announced. Their construction cost averaged $10,000 for the January-June period this year; the figure was $9600 for the same period in 1949.

In the first half of 1950, Prince Georges and Montgomery Counties each claimed about a fourth of all new dwelling units authorized by building permits issued in Greater Washington. Fairfax County and the District were next, accounting for 19 and 17 percent, respectively.

New 'Home of '50' Added to Display

A ONE-STORY, contemporary-style home has been selected for the "Homes of 1950" exhibition, bringing to eight the number of mid-century houses already lined up for the four-week display.

Plans and specifications of all eight homes have been studied and approved by John M. Walton, architect, Edward R. Carr, builder, and Frank J. Luchs, realtor. The homes—and others subsequently selected—will be subject to a continuing check while being built.

Like the homes previously approved, the newest addition will be furnished. It is being built by Jonathan Woodner Co. and will be decorated by Peerless Modern House.

Under construction in Fairfax County a short distance beyond Seven Corners off Lee blvd., the modern, ranch-type house will have three bedrooms, radiant heat, carport, overhanging eaves to keep out the sun's heat in summer and admit it in the winter.

Peerless Modern House plans to use the Paul McCobb Planner Group in furnishing this Home of '50. This sleek, graceful furniture in black lacquer and natural birch comes in units that can be arranged together in a variety of ways.

With eight furnished houses already set for the "Homes of 1950," the annual opportunity for Washington to get a long look at the best in new homes and home furnishings on the market promises to be the biggest and best yet. Last year's exhibition—visited by more than 300,000 persons—consisted of 8 furnished and 14 unfurnished homes.

The month-long show opens September 10. Its sponsors—builders, furniture stores and The Washington Post—are pointing for 24 or so homes, with an equal number furnished and unfurnished.

The Homes of '50, throughout Greater Washington, will range in price from an estimated $10,000 to $60,000. They will be open daily and Sunday to the public at no charge.

Besides the Woodner house, the following builders and furniture stores will be represented in the "Homes of 1950":

Beitzell Construction Co., Inc.—Malcolm Scates, Inc.; John R. de Sibour & Co.; Inc.—Woodward & Lothrop; W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co.—Mayer & Co.; Potomac Construction Co.—Milton H. Rossler, Inc.; M. T. Broyhill & Sons, Inc.—Biggs Antique Co., Inc., O. F. Smith & Bros.—William E. Miller Co., Inc., and Clyde J. Verkerke—The Glass House.

FHA Analysis

Credit Curbs Toughest on Costly Homes

DESPITE recent credit controls put into effect, the Federal Housing Administration expects a high percentage of its mortgage ipsurance to be written in the lower and moderate price ranges.

According to FHA Commissioner Franklin D. Richards, the new credit controls will be felt more strongly in the higher priced ranges because of the proportionate increase in equity requirements.

He gave this example: under the new credit controls, the down payment on a new $10,000 house would be $1750, while a new home valued at $15,000 requires a $3750 down payment.

The effect of the new controls, he said, should be to produce a relatively greater market for lower priced housing than for the higher priced ranges.

Permit Asked For 10 D. C. Homes

J. A. Mount & Co. has applied for a permit to construct 10 two-story houses in the 4500 blocks of Eads pl. and 45th st. se. Dimensions of the dwellings are 16 by 26 feet.

Bulldozers Shatter Lake Barcroft's Calm

By Robert P. Jordan

JOSEPH VINCENT BARGER, a shrewd, practical businessman not given to fancy flights of speech, becomes poetically minded at mention of Lake Barcroft.

"Gee," he exclaims, "this is like being in heaven. It's just a glorious spot."

Then his eyes seek the window, where pine trees stand tall and thick a few feet beyond and the green hills roll gently out of sight and the sun-sparkling lake rests in the valley.

The occasional sight of a bulldozer crashing through the underbrush is part of this picture and of no moment to Barger. All is as it should be. Civilization is coming to Lake Barcroft. Barger, you might say, is its advance agent.

The 114-acre lake and the surrounding 566 acres of woodland were sold by the Alexandria Water Co. in March to a group of New Englanders. For nearly 100 years, the lake had served as a reservoir for the water company.

Seven miles from the White House, the property is betweeen Columbia and Leesburg pikes, in Fairfax County. Construction of new reservoir facilities at Occoquan, Va., made the lake surplus to the water company's needs.

Development of the project, to be known as Lake Barcroft Estates, is getting under way. Barger, vice president of Lake Barcroft Estates, Inc., is in charge of operations. Within four months, he estimates, roads will have been built, sewer and water facilities installed, and work started on the first homes.

$32 Million Project

WHEN the development is completed—in perhaps five years—an estimated 32 million dollars will have gone into the property.

The men back of the project are veteran developers. Chairman of the board is Charles E. Docksey; president is David Miller, assistant attorney general of Massacusetts. Lake Barcroft is their 35th development, and typical of their Present Building Believed Assured

Although the supply of steel and other building products will be curtailed if allocations for war production become effective, there should be sufficient material to complete homes and other buildings now under construction, according to C. B. Sweet, president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

"Materials dealers will meet the demand to the best of their ability and will make every effort to see that available supplies go through normal trade channels to legitimate users," Sweet said.

"If the demand for new homes continues greater than the supply of materials will accommodate, it is likely that mortgage credit terms will be stiffened again by administrative action, so as to remove more buyers from the market," he predicted.

The record-breaking number of homes put under construction during the last two months, he said, will mean a continued heavy demand for building products for some weeks to come, regardless of the number of new housing units started from now on.

23 Dwellings Planned In Hollywood, Md.

Hannum & Turner, Hyattsville, have received a permit to build 23 one-story homes in the 5000 block of Niagara rd., Hollywood, Md. The brick and cinder block houses will be 34 by 26 feet each.

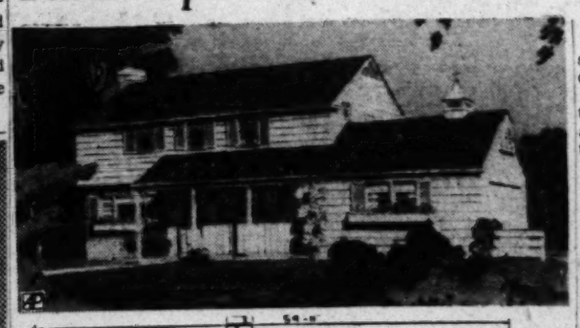
Ten Homes Proposed

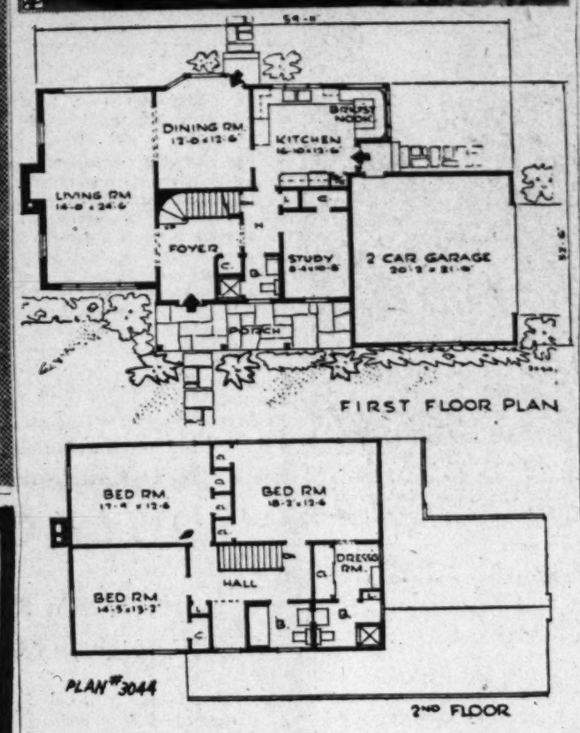
Bermanor Homes, Inc., has filed a permit application for construction of 10 one-story houses in Wheaton, Md. Plans call for the dwellings to be 32 by 29 feet each. The builder is located in the Victor Building.

Five Houses Scheduled

Wood Acres Corp., 6701 Hillandale rd., Bethesda, has announced plans to construct five two-story homes on Ramsgate rd., Wood Acres, Bethesda. Sub-bids will be taken shortly.

Build 'Up' to Get More for Your Money





More house for your money can still be obtained in two stories in spite of the popularity of rambling one-story homes.

The economy of construction is the reason — smaller foundation area, for instance, and other factors.

The plan above for a big house (seven rooms, three baths, large entrance foyer) covers only 1064 square feet, exclusive of garage and porch. That is equal to the area of the average small house.

Another 1052 square feet of living area are added by the second floor.

Hyattsville Homes Planned

City Engineering & Construction Corp. has applied for a permit to build nine two-story houses in the 5800 and 5900 blocks of Sargent rd., Hyattsville. The frame dwellings will be 28 by 20 feet each. The builder's offices are at 5604 Kirkside dr., Chevy Chase.

Permit Asked for Kensington Houses

Parkwood Homes, Inc., has filed a permit application for construction of 33 homes in the 10100 blocks of Thornwood and Wildwood rds. and the 4400 block of Everett st., Kensington, Md. The houses will be one-story and of brick and cinder block construction Address of the corporation is 38th st. and Bunker Hill rd., Brentwood, Md.

Commercial, Industrial Real Estate Sales Volume Goes Up

COMMERCIAL and industrial real estate are sharing in the general uptrend of real estate sales volume of the last 6 months, Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, reported yesterday.

He based the statement on findings of the fifty-first periodic survey of the real estate market in which real estate boards in 252 cities reported to NAREB.

"The business property market, always an index of investors' judgment on the business future of individual cities, has been affected, like the residential market, by a public attitude favoring immediate investment," Nelson said.

Primary factor responsible, the survey shows, is a growing anticipation of the inflation effect of both war preparedness and of other national programs.

Combining with this to bring sellers and buyers together is the market adjustment from World War II scarcities that has taken place in the past two years. Since the war activity peak, many cities have been reporting that little well-located, well-tenanted downtown property is for sale.

Now some owners are concluding to "take their profit" and release their still scarce business properties at a salable price.

Statistically, the situation for commercial, industrial, and farm properties measures up as follows, Nelson said:

1. Prices for business property, measuring the demand, are higher than they were 6 months ago in 31 percent of the reporting cities, are stable in 59 percent of the cities, and have weakened in only 10 percent of the cities. In cities of more than 500,000 population, most sensitive to commercial trends, business property prices are on the rise in 3 of 4 reporting cities.

2. Volume of sales, limited by the scarcity of offerings, remains on the level of 1949 in 76 percent of all the reporting cities. But it is up in 19 percent of the reporting cities, and in 56 percent of the cities of more than 500,000 population.

(Six months ago the association's survey showed on uptrend in sales volume in only 10 percent of all reporting cities, and anuptrend in prices in only 11 percent of the cities. Six months ago, not a single city of more than 500,000 population had an up for commercial property in either prices or volume of sales.)

New Building Code Can Cut Costs

AS MUCH as 10 percent can be slashed from present buildings' costs in every community that adopts the new performance-type building code developed after years of work, according to the Construction Research Bureau, national clearing house for building information.

The code has been prepared by the Building Officials Conference of America, which is composed of 500 municipal officials representing more than 80 percent of the Nation's population. The comprehensive basic code covers every building situation in simplified terms for use in communities where engineers and technicians are not available.

Construction costs can be cut through use of the new code because it permits new materials and construction techniques barred by many existing regulations.

Excessive and unnecessary requirements for structural strength which add to costs are eliminated; however, the code does set up requirements for minimum structural strength, fire-resistance and sanitation that must be met.

Wall Construction

PARTICULAR attention is given to wall construction in the new code, which states that walls in one- and two-family houses must resist fire for 45 minutes; those in multi-family buildings for 90 minutes.

Although some cities require an outside wall to be 12 inches thick, the model code states that 8 inches is sufficient for homes. The code permits spacing wall studs as much as 4 inches apart in some types of contructions, instead of the 16 inches now generally required. Use of thinner sheathing is permitted.

Where some codes rule out any wall finish except plaster, the new code allows any type of construction which meets fire-resistance requirements.

Other cost-saving provisions are: flexible insulated electrical wiring instead of expensive metal conduit; smaller sizes of copper and brass water pipe; elimination of plumbing traps between house and sewer; lighter-weight roofs and floors.

Allows for Change

SINCE the model code contains performance rather than specification requirements, it will be up-to-date at all times and will recognize new materials which are developed to meet performance standards.

Not only will the model code modernize hundreds of outmoded building regulations now in effect, its sponsors say, but will make it easy and inexpensive for thousands of communities which have no laws to adopt adequate building regulations.

Garage Permit Asked

Permit has been requested for construction of a one-story, concrete parking garage, 85 by 135 feet in size, to be built at 1206 E st. nw. Owner is the Christian Heurich Estate, 1617 K st. nw.; builder is the Fred Drew Construction Co., 1048 30th st. nw.

Latest in Home Heating: 'Upside Down' Furnace

THE old fashioned warm-air heating system — with the furnace unit turned upside down and the register outlets moved to the outside walls—is the latest word in home heating.

So reports an article in the current issue of The Revue of the Society of Residential Appraisers.

The author, Rogers Follansbee, Chicago heating engineer, describes its installation and proper construction procedures. He explains how the system works in both conventional homes with basements or basementless construction built on a concrete slab.

An important factor in proper installation, Follansbee writes, is to replace heat at points of air leakage such as windows, doors, and outer walls. This is done by piping warm air from a pit beneath a "downflow" furnace through a duct to floor registers located beneath windows or other points of cold air leakage.

The registers, usually no more than 6 inches wide, are set even with the floor so they do not interfere with furniture placement.

The system insures nearly an even temperature from floor to ceiling, the engineer says. Greatest floor to ceiling difference is three degrees.

Figures on fuel consumption for one of the early installations of this type in the Chicago area show that in a basementless 1100 sq. ft. house, 850 gallons of oil were used annually at a cost of $120 per year.

Follansbee cautions that efficient installation of any heating system in a basementless house requires that the building site be well drained, edge insulation used, and a moisture barrier installed over a proper fill.

Northern Hard Maple Shipments Increase Over '49

SHIPMENTS of northern hard maple, beech and birch flooring for the first half of 1950 amounted to 30,600,000 feet, an increase of 29 percent compared with the same period last year, according to L. M. Clady, secretary-manager of the Maple Flooring Manufacturers Association.

New orders booked increased 66 percent during the six-month period, while production increased only five percent. Stocks and unfilled orders, as of June 30, amounted to seven million feet and 12,475,000 feet, respectively.

"Production started to climb in May and June, however, and current rough lumber purchases indicate that from now on, the northern manufacturers will produce enough flooring to keep up with the extraordinary demand," Clady said.

"If the building situation remains normal, there is every reason to believe that 1950 shipments will equal the 1948 figure of 75 million feet—a record for the northern industry," he said.

Civilization Comes to Rustic Lake Barcroft

Despite its short distance from downtown Washington, Lake Barcroft is the same today as it was 100 years ago. Within a few months, however, roads will have been built throughout the surrounding land and the first homes started of what promises to be one of the finest developments in the country method of operation: fitting the project to the terrain.

For this reason Barger is certain he'll be calling Barcroft a "glorious spot" when it's finished, even as now. All plans are directed to that end.

Top man of planning and home design is the internationally known architect, Walter Gropius. Now at Harvard University, where he is dean of the graduate school of architecture and design, Gropius visited the property again last week for further study.

The area has been divided into 1250 lots of varying sizes. Sites in the first section to be developed range from one-fourth acre to one acre. Barger figures that a total of around 800 houses will be built. Many persons, he explains, are buying two lots.

Once the roads are in, site purchasers can build the type of home they desire, and its construction cost is secondary. It can be in the moderate price range—but its plans and specifications must pass architectural scrutiny. It must be, in other words, a custom-built house.

Ultimately, Lake Barcroft is to be a development of small country estates. It is to have its own special police force, several private beaches, boating and fishing facilities.

Gropius plans construction of a large nursery for children; he proposes extensive planting of azaleas throughout the project to make the rolling hills a riot of color; he suggests that homes have items like built-in barbecue pits on the porch to make for country living.

The architect will design and supervise construction of four moderately priced, three-bedroom, two-bath ramblers. They are to be built in four different price ranges. They will be designed for sleep, work, and play—by area.

The property is to retain its rustic flavor. Its residents will live the pastoral life, Barger says, citing the "hidden curves, the valleys, the peaks, the knolls." They will drive along streets of quaint name: Tollgate, Bridge Circle, Grasshopper drive.

Insurance Aids Home Buying

LIFE INSURANCE dollars have played a significant role in the post war housing expansion, the Institute of Life Insurance reports.

At the start of 1950, investments of life insurance funds came to $8,232,000,000—compared with $3,819,000,000 five years ago, according to the institute.

Of the housing mortages held at the beginning of this year, $5,970,000,000 was for one to four family units. The remaining $2,262,000,000 represented mortgages on multi-family housing.

The life companies also had in their investment portfolios $1,131,000,000 of farm mortgages and $3,326,000,000 of mortgages on industrial and commercial properties, making a grand total of $12,689,000,000 in mortgages held by the companies.

The total new mortgage financing of life companies in 1949 amounted to $3,312,000,000, of which $1,747,000,000 or 53 percent was accounted for by one to four family units. In 1945, this type of housing represented only 35 percent of the new mortgage financing.

Vast Project Sprouts From Vegetable Patch

By Graham Berry

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—On a huge vegetable patch 12 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles are sprouting thousands of homes, the first of a crop of 17,150 which will comprise Lakewood, the largest "planned city" in America.

Barring war restrictions, its builders, Aetna Construction and Biltmore Homes Corporations, propose to convert the bean and sugar beet fields into a city as big as Troy, N. Y., or Topeka, Kans., in the next two years.

They've gotten away to a fast start. After five months, 4600 homes are in various stages of construction, many of them completed. The first families of Lakewood moved in July 8.

The "city," planned as the home of 70,000 persons, will cover 3500 level acres shaped like a giant V. Near the apex are 154 acres which soon will yield their last bean crop. Here will rise a modernistic shopping center, expected to do $100,000,000 worth of business a year.

"We want to be conservative in talking about Lakewood," cautions Joseph K. Eichenbaum, who is coordinating the design of the business district.

It's as easy as being conservative atbout the Grand Canyon.

60 Homes a Day

LAKEWOOD'S land was purchased in a single deal for $8,800,000. The development will include 20 schools, 37 playgrounds and 17 churches. Six thousand workmen are completing homes at a rate of 60 per day. In two and a half months, 1800 houses have been sold.

Here are some of the model homes, all completely furnished, which are shown to prospective buyers in the Lakewood, Calif., housing project. When completed, Lakewood will have 17,150 homes, making it the largest "planned city" in America. The development is 12 miles from Los Angeles

The homes, ranging in price from $7825 to $9700 and in floorspace from 880 square feet to 1050, are of 13 different designs and in 39 color combinations. Lots average 50 by 100 feet.

The houses are one-story high with stucco exteriors, shingle roofs and contain two and three bedrooms. All homes have stainless steel sinks and garbage disposal units. Payments range from $43 to $54 monthly, including taxes, insurance and interest.

If you desire, you may buy for nothing down. The refrigerator will cost you $1 a month and the others similar amounts.

The purchase price includes sidewalks, paved streets and street lights. Some 133 miles of streets will be illuminated by 5000 lights.

The automobile receives special attention at Lakewood. Each house has a single or double garage. To minimize traffic hazards, landscaped parkway strips will separate arterial highways from streets in front of homes.

Three freeways eventually will link Lakewood with downtown Los Angeles. Highways already connect with the beaches, about five miles away.

Eichenbaum, a former Chicago department store developer, plans to eliminate truck traffic in the business district by a series of underground tunnels for trucks. The shopping area will have parking space for 12,000 cars. The parking lots will be laid out so they can be used by helicopters.

Another innovation Eichenbaum plans is a two-way theater with one lobby. In one section youngsters can watch cartoons and westerns while their parents, in an adjoining auditorium, see "mature" films.

Back of the world's biggest building development are two men who have been told they are crazy to start such a vast undertaking. But President Lou Boyar of Aetna and President Mark Taper of Biltmore laughed at similar remarks while they worked on other big home developments. Before tackling Lakewood, they had erected 30,000 homes in southern California.

Plant Vegetables Right Through August

By James H. Beattie

SWEET corn, tomatoes and lima beans really come into their own in August! Although August weather is usually unfavorable for the starting of seeds and plants it looks as if this year will be an exception and we may escape the usual August drouth. For many reasons, high prices being one of them, this is the year to continue the planting of vegetables right through the month.

There are many food plants that may still be planted and grown to maturity. For planting during the first half of the month we suggest bush snap beans, beets, radishes, leaf and head lettuce, garden peas, spinach, kale, mustard greens and summer squash. For the latter half of the month plant spinach, radishes, loose leaf and head lettuce, kale, mustard greens and (with an element of chance about the results) bush snap beans and beets.

Plant vacant space to cover crops. Crimson clover, winter oats, rape, kale, rye, vetch and others.

Compost Piles

THIS is the season for either adding to an existing compost pile or starting a new one. Green material such as grass, weeds, sweet corn fodder and vegetable tops is abundant now.

Disease and insect infested material liable to carry the pests overwinter to next season's crops should be avoided.

Anthracnose—infested cucumber or melon vines, or the early blight of tomatoes and anthracnose infested bean plants are particularly objectionable. Bermuda grass, or other weeds that spread by stems or roots should be carefully excluded. All plants bearing viable weed seeds should be kept out of the compost pile.

A few pounds of ammonium sulphate, ground dolomitic limestone and superphosphate added with each lot of green material will enrich the compost and hasten decomposition.

Onions, Potatoes

MOST early potatoes and onions grown from sets have completed their growth and the tops have died down. Harvest promptly otherwise loss from rot is liable to occur. Lift the onion bulbs carefully without skinning or bruising, leaving tops in place, and spread them thinly, without touching each other, in a cool, well-ventilated place, such as overhead in the outdoor garage to dry. Onions will keep in such a place until Christmas or later.

Wet soil is liable to induce decay in potatoes, moreover weeds and grass may soon make the harvesting of the crop a difficult matter. The harvesting should be done when the soil is sufficiently dry so that it does not stick to the tubers. Washing after harvest and before storage may spread the rot organisms.

Careful handling, avoiding cutting and bruising and storage spread thinly in a cool, well-ventilated place gives satisfactory results. Slat-bottom trays supported a few inches off a basement or a garage floor is a good method to keep early potatoes. Treatment with a hormone, "Bar-sprout" will retard sprouting if applied before the sprouts arise.

Spray or Dust Grapes

THERE'S an excellent reason for dusting or spraying grapes this season. The high humidity has created a serious rot problem. Fermate dust or spray is now the standard treatment for grapes but bordeaux mixture is also used. The latter is obtainable from any dealer but the Fermate is still difficult to obtain.

Japanese beetles feed voraciously on grape foliage but these pests may be kept under control by spraying with methoxychlor (DuPont Marlate), a close but less poisonous relative of DDT. The spraying should be confined as far as possible to the foliage, keeping it off the fruit and the treatment should be discontinued a month before the grapes ripen.

Both early and late tomato blight may be prevented to some extent by treatment with the tribasic copper materials. Several excellent fungicides including Parazate and Dithane Z-78 are difficult to obtain but local dealers have materials that contain the fixed copper fungicides that are quite effective on tomatoes.

Trimming and training tomato vines to stakes or other supports helps tremendously in preventing losses from diseases by permitting free ventilation around the plants and the better admission of sunlight. Trained tomatoes may be more effectively dusted or sprayed.

Drooping Limbs

MANY apple trees of the winter varieties are already drooping under an excessive load of fruit and in danger of breaking. It is not too late to thin the fruit. Only yesterday we observed a small branch of the Golden Delicious variety with 15 apples whereas five or six would be enough. The removal of a portion of the fruit as this time will reduce the danger of injury to the trees and improve the quality of the remainder.

The thinning offers an opportunity for the removal of scabby, worm infested, or otherwise undesirable specimens. Those removed should be buried or otherwise disposed of.

Propping the drooping limbs with saplings having a crotch to fit around the apple limbs, or with other sturdy supports often prevents serious breakage of the trees. Sometimes tying the limbs on opposite sides of the tree together, using small rope, sash cord, or other material that will not chafe the bark provides a satisfactory remedy.

Wire is objectionable because it may cut the bark; however pieces of old tire placed between the wire and the tree will help. There's always the danger that these wire ties will be forgotten and left to do permanent injury to the tree.

Permanent insurance against the splitting of the larger limbs may be provided by placing screw eyes into pairs of limbs on opposite sides of the tree and connecting these with a cable or chain fitted with a turnbuckle.

Bad crotches between the main limbs may be permanently secured by boring holes through the limbs and tying them together with a long bolt. A piece of ½-inch reinforcing rod of such length that it extends through each limb two or three inches is cheap and satisfactory. After it is slipped in place, the projecting ends are bent at right angles with a heavy hammer. The ends are soon covered by the growth of the tree and apparently do no harm. Now, while there is a real danger of the trees being broken by the weight of the fruit or by storms, is an excellent time to do this work.

Tomatoes Need Extra Fertilizer

THE present spell of exceptionally rainy weather makes it important for late tomatoes to receive aditional fertilizer, declares E. K. Bender, vegetable crops specialist at the University of Maryland.

"The water is leaching away plant foods in the soil. The tomatoes need this extra nutrition most during the third and fourth months after replanting, when fertilizing will do the most toward increasing yields. Many growers find it desirable to apply it now."

The specialist's prescription for this tomato "tonic" is: On silty loams, sidedress with 500-800 pounds of 4-12-8 four to six weeks after transplanting; on sandy loams with little organic matter, apply 500 pounds of 5-10-5 three weeks after transplanting and again at the time of the last cultivation; sandy loams with high organic content should be sidedressed with 500 pounds of 4-12-8 three weeks after transplanting and again at the last cultivation.

Sidedressing may be applied by a sidedresser or a cultivator with a fertilizer attachment. Both machines cultivate and place the fertilizer in bands at the desired distance from the row. The dressing may also be spread by hand between the rows and cultivated in, but this method is less effective.

Now's Time to Enjoy Gardens and Flowers

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

WITH the promise of hot days ahead, it seems to be the season in which we should take time out for the enjoyment of gardens and flowers. Many of the heaviest garden chores have been attended to and restful hours can be spent in studying the new bulb catalogues and making plans for future purchases. It is a good time to remember the periods when there was scanty bloom and to fill such gaps with new material.

It is also a good time to check over containers and holders and to practice the art of flower arrangement. Containers are very important wherever flowers are used. They should be suitable in texture but should never overpower the flowers themselves or catch the attention first. So many people seem to want to exhibit their container rather than the flowers—the container should complement them rather than be the star performer.

Holders are so important and there are so many kinds that it is well to practice with them and learn their good and bad qualities particularly if planning to exhibit. Many a fine entry has been disqualified because the flower material has slipped during transit or at the show.

In a flat bowl where the container is apt to slip around it should be anchored with melted wax or modelling clay. Some teachers advise the assembling of groups of flowers before placing them in the holder. If this is done the groups should be tied firmly together before putting them in. Where stems are too small to hold firmly in a pin holder they can be tied to a short piece of heavy stemmed foliage such as funkia or daylily.

Scotch tape can be used to make a lattice work across the mouth of a wide vase. Heavy plant material placed in between the openings will hold steady and firm. Scotch tape is also useful in anchoring tall flowers to the side of a container.

Beech for Foliage

THE use of foliage has become much more important in flower arrangement and many a winning entry has owed its high honors to the use of unusual and beautiful foliage. This year copper beech has been much used. The Alexandria Garden Club's winning entry in the inter-club class at the Lily Show combined it with regal lilies. It gives a handsome background to almost any type of flowers and color.

The ladies who made the arrangements at the Rose Festival in Newark found in the garden there a cut beech with its fine cut green leaves and used it in many of their rose arrangements. Sprays of cotoneaster, begonia, red barberry also were used. A bronze barberry was found to be excellent with the rose fashion. Green pine cones brought out the color in copper colored roses in a beautiful entry.

Wiring flowers above water has been ruled out at many of the large shows as it was so greatly abused. Flowers now have to have their own natural curves without assistance but they can be trained. At a recent talk on arrangement the gladiolus used had been given graceful curves by bending the tips and holding them in position with waxed paper overnight.

The speaker used pachasandra to cover the holder in a low bowl used with a modern arrangement of gladiolus and in a table arrangement of gladiolus and roses used grape vines and tendrils. The white underside of the grape foliage made a very lovely effect with the white blossoms. The foliage of Baptisia was also used and Russian Olive with its silver lined leaves.

Each With a Name

HAVING fun with your flowers is highly important. A suggestion from a reader is naming arrangements particularly when giving them as gifts. She writes:

"I assembled my bouquets, tucking in gay petunias, daisies, ferns, cluster chrysanthemums and long sprays of fragrant mint. As I stood back and gazed upon the colorful array perfumed with late blooming honeysuckle, I began naming my creations. It surely adds to the fun to give names to your floral offerings, as you tender them ot your relatives and friends.

"At the entrance to the apartment house where I live I placed on the table a showy arrangement with splashes of deep-dyed sumac leaves, thorny red haws, sprays of glowing sassafras and dogwood. What name did I choose? "Concert Pitch." For the lovely arrangement in a wide spread ivory vase, the name "Romance" came to mind. The low dishes which fell heir to broken blossoms with bits of fern and mint received "Petite Loves." Odds and ends left over I called "Medley."

Fruit Varies on Same Apple Tree

MANY a gardener who planted an apple tree years ago now wishes that he had one of the newer three-in-one or four-in-one specimens. This type produces not just one variety of apple but three or four respectively all on the same tree. In the small home garden that is of course a great advantage.

All our named varieties of apple trees are budded because apples do not come true from seed and other means of propagation are not satisfactory. Instead of budding just one variety to the understock three, four and even five different varieties are used to produce multiple top trees. These may include an early, mid-season and late variety; or kinds for different purposes—for eating fresh, apple sauce, baking and winter storing. Trees of this type are available from most nurseries.

Just because one has an established tree does not mean that he must forever abandon the idea of benefitting from the multiple kind. There is no need to cut down the old one and start anew. That would mean several years without any apples. The answer lies in budding other varieties to the old one even if it should be a wildling. Finding friends who have trees of the varieties wanted is the first problem.

Late July and August is perhaps the best time to do the actual work so no time should be lost in getting started with the preliminaries.

Bud Sticks Required

THE first requirement is bud sticks or scions. These are especially cut twigs, one year old, and of close to lead pencil thickness. Cut them just before they are needed and wrap promptly in wet newspaper. Never put them in water; that only weakens them by diluting the sap.

Next locate on your tree vigorous new branches on which the bark is still fairly thin and pliable. Short pieces of string will come in handy for marking the exact places where the buds are to go. If more than one variety is to be added, labels giving the names of the budding stock are still better.

After fastening the string to the tree, stand back to check the distribution. Relocate those which will have a better chance in a different place while fixing in your mind the direction of each bud so that the new growth will make a well shaped tree. A good budding knife is a decided asset, but any sharp knife will make a good job.

The next step is to cut the buds from the bud sticks. First a leaf is cut off, leaving part of the stem to serve as a handle. Then a shield-like one-inch piece is cut away, starting one-half inch below the bud, with the handle in the center. If some of the woody tissue adheres to the under side of the bud lift it carefully with the knife.

The easiest way to keep the cut surface moist is to place it on the tongue with the handle facing upwards. Now make a slit into the thin bark of your tree where the shield is to be inserted. Then make a second cut across the top so that the two will form the capital letter T. It takes a little practice to gauge the size and depth of the cut. If inexperienced, make some trial cuts before work is started to get the hang of it. This will teach one to cut just through the bark, leaving the underlying cambium layer practically untouched.

Special Knife Used

NEXT, that part of the bark which forms two wings or flaps below the top cut must be carefully lifted. Professional budding knives have for this purpose a special bone blade opposite the knife. A tongue depressor such as is used by physicians, and available at almost any drugstore, serves as a good substitute. Cut in half lengthwise, round the ends and put a dull edge on them.

From now on the work must proceed as speedily as possible so that the exposed cambium will not dry out. Carefully lift the wings of the T-cut and slip the bud, held until this time on the tongue, into the opening. To do this rapidly and without fuss takes practice but one soon gets on to it. The top cut of the shield should rest just below the top of the T-cut to bring the two active growing layers into intimate contact, which obviously is impossible where there is an overlap.

With the bud in proper position a rubber band of medium width and five to six inches long is wound around the stem, leaving the handle and the tiny bud at its axil exposed. The ends of the rubber band are tucked beneath the next turn to hold them in place. Rubber bands are more satisfactory than raffia or strips of cloth because they give when the tissues begins to grow. Put them on only firmly enough to keep the shield in tight contact with the understock.

After about two weeks the bud should have united with the tissue beneath and the rubber band is removed to relieve all pressure. When the bud begins to grow cut off the end of the branch about half an inch above the union. Also cut away all new shoots as they arise below the union. As the new branches increase in size, which may take a year or two, those which were not budded should be cut away except where part of the shield is to produce the original variety.

Furniture Expeditions

FOR AN intriguing hunting expedition, you don't have to travel far. Energetic home furnishers can take a trek around the old home town and come up with "big game."

Such an expedition is designed for homemakers and amateur craftsmen with imagination and enterprise. It leads to a variety of second-hand stores and junk shops.

It pays off in fun, a sense of adventure and, frequently, home furnishing treasures that are the source of much satisfaction and pride.

If it's to be your first trip, remember that it's not like buying in a regular store. Often you can bargain with the dealer. Some of them expect it—and enjoy it. Actually, you can probably come out cheaper on the item you covet if you'll collect several things you can use and quote him a price on the lot.

Take Your Time

DON'T buy too hurriedly. Consider your particular need carefully as well as the possibilities of the item in question. You want something which, in the end, will have good proportions and clean lines. These, you wish to achieve by a not-too-difficult process.

If you can, select articles in pine, gum, or other soft woods which are easy to saw and nail.

You'll probably wish to remove ugly carving and clumsy feet. If the carving is glued on, it can be removed with a chisel. The resulting rough spot can be smoothed with sandpaper.

The appearance of dressers, chests, and desks can frequently be improved greatly by replacing the old metal drawer pulls with more modern ones. Screw holes, cracks, and keyholes can be filled with plastic wood.

After your repairs and alterations are finished, you're ready to apply a new finish. If the surface is smooth, wash any dirt and wax off with a detergent and water. Let the wood dry thoroughly, then sand the surface lightly.

If the old finish is scarred or flaky, remove it completely with paint or varnish remover. Wash it again with mineral spirits to eliminate the wax residue from the remover.

Then, apply enamel undercoat as a primer and finish with a semi-gloss enamel. If you wish a "natural" finish instead, you can apply a wax.

If the wood is porous or soft, you can precede the wax with oil polishing. To obtain a suitable oil polish, mix a half pint of raw linseed oil with one tablespoon of liquid drier. Rub it onto the surface sparingly with a clean cloth and repeat about five times—at weekly intervals.

New Look for Old

ALMOST any piece of furniture you find can be given a new look with imagination and effort. Old buffets become under-the-window chests. Unsightly, hard chairs and settees can be made comfortable and attractive with the aid of cushions and a little carpentry.

Often a too-straight chair can be given a comfortable angle by merely shortening the back legs. Very attractive backs for porch or garden benches can be fashioned from headboards and footboards of old beds.

Cumbersome old carved picture frames may be painted to make lovely frames for dressing table mirrors. They also make striking fronts for shadow boxes

One inveterate hunter made a distinctive coffee table from a junk shop item costing 75 cents. It was an old wooden holder for a globe map of the world and had a wide horizontal band circling the middle. This was shellacked. An iron base was attached to the circular iron segments supporting it, and a glass top cut to fit.

Home Building Methods Superior To Those of 1920s

BETTER materials and methods are going into home building now than in the 1920s, says the Housing and Home Finance Agency, but progress in improved dwellings is not as great as in other fields.

The agency reports that the reason for this is partly due to different characteristics of the product as contrasted with an automobile, for example

In the automobile field, HHFA says, a single producer or organization is responsible for determining the market and the product desired. A market survey is made. Then, research is directed at producing the kind of cars desired by the prevailing market.

Controls Lifted

Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods has removed rent controls from two California cities on the basis of local option actions taken by their governing bodies. They are Walnut Creek, in Contra Costa County, and Belvedere, in Marin County.

All-Purpose Room Is Useful In Today's Small Houses

THE ALL-purpose room is coming into its own in these days of small houses and limited floor space.

It can be made of a space no larger than 9 by 10 feet in a new, small house—or it can be built into a like area in one's present home. It should be, first off, convenient to living room, kitchen, and bathroom.

To turn it into an all-purpose room, build in a single bed lengthwise against one wall. When flanked with closed cabinets and open shelves, the bed takes on the effect of a couch.

Against the opposite wall, build a large folding table that opens out when in use, and will disappear when it is folded down flat against the wall. Over this table, build open shelves up to ceiling height.

If the room has a view, frame it with a floor-to-ceiling picture window. Over it hang draw-curtains to harmonize with draperies in the adjoining living room, and paint the walls in the all-purpose room to match.

Many Uses

THE room is now equipped for quick changes. At will, you can use it as guest room, dining room, nursery, playroom, den, library or music room.

As a guest room, the basic furniture will provide every convenience. The occupant will have a comfortable bed, cabinets for storing belongings, and the folding table to serve as desk or dressertop.

If what you need is a den, library or study, the bed serves as a comfortable couch surrounded by convenient bookshelves, and the folding table is the easy equivalent of a good-sized library table or desk.

Since the all-purpose room is adjacent to the living-room, it is well fitted to serve as a music room. The couch and the picture window with its draw-curtains, with the addition of a few other simple decorative features, provide an appropriate atmosphere for the family with special musical interests.

If at another time you need more space for dining, the room has all the necessary elements. Nearness to kitchen makes serving easy. The large folding table with its open shelves above are practical features, while the picture window framing a view makes this room a pleasant one for restful meals.

Arms Orders Not Reducing Auto Output

Detroit, July 29 (AP).—The auto industry still hasn't any arms orders that would interfere with passenger car production. It doesn't expect any of that type for some time to come.

But nobody in the industry doubts the nation's defense planning eventually will cut down the record-smashing car production that has marked this year's first seven months.

With one more working day this month, domestic output from January 1 through July is certain to fall only slightly below 4,500,000 cars and trucks.

Some armament orders, of course, have been placed with the auto industry, like the Cadillac light tank contract, but they will not interfere with normal production. Probably there will be more orders, but they appear certain to go first to the truck manufacturers.

There has been considerable hysteria in automotive circles, chiefly in the merchandising division, since the Korean outbreak. Many persons who had no intention of buying a new car this year suddenly have decided they need one immediately. As a result, scores of new car dealers have begun to decline new orders. This, in turn, makes the situation appear much worse to the would-be car buyer than it really is.

Actually the auto industry's overall picture is much better than it has been for many years. The number of persons who want new cars is far greater today than it was three or four years ago. But the number urgently in need of new cars is much smaller than it was at the time of Pearl Harbor.

Credit Unions In D. C. Show Rapid Growth

By S. Oliver Goodman

The credit union movement in Washington is at a new high level with 95,772 members and assets of nearly 14 million dollars.

This was shown yesterday in figures compiled by C. R. Orchard, director of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions.

At the end of 1949, the 118 small loan associations in Washington had a savings share balance of $12,537,051 and loans outstanding stood at $9,838,108. This was a gain of 39 percent in shares and a spurt of 47 percent in loans over the previous year.

Growth has been especially pronounced since World War II ended. Assets and savings shares have more than doubled, while loans have spurted five-fold. Membership has risen more than 50 percent since 1945.

Credit unions are cooperative groups, generally formed of employes in a business or Government agency, to make small loans to members at a fixed and nominal rate of interest. They are under either Federal or District supervision and locally many of them are bound together in the District of Columbia Credit Union League, Inc.

Illustrating their rapid expansion, here are figures for Washington credit unions since 1939:

Year	No.	Members	Assets
1939	107	61,103	$4,522,193
1940	107	70,255	5,792,543
1941	114	78,532	6,859,675
1942	109	70,803	6,359,314
1943	104	67,148	6,203,343
1944	106	66,099	6,203,746
1945	108	62,095	6,613,620
1946	108	62,417	7,388,682
1947	111	66,527	8,410,793
1948	116	79,950	10,187,506
1949	118	95,772	13,973,079

SWEET TOOTH: America's sweet tooth has grown to the point where the per capita consumption of candy in pounds is greater than that of butter, cheese or cereals. Latest Commerce Department figures show that in 1949 the average person ate 10.2 pounds of butter, 7.2 pounds of cheese, 8 pounds of cereals and 17 pounds of candy.

EXPERT TO TALK: Benjamin Wood will tell local food dealers how to increase sales and profit margins through their average section. He will address a general meeting Monday night of the District Grocery Stores in the Hamilton Hotel. Wood, director of marketing for the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, will be here at the invitation of Paul D. Kerman, DGS president. Wood's subject is one of prime importance in the grocery field, where latest figures show that beverages now take 19.5 percent of total food dollars.

WOOD

PREVIEW SET: Washington dealers will preview the new Motorola television and radio lines at the Shoreham Hotel, August 7 and 8. James H. Simon, head of the local Motorola distributing firm, recently returned from Chicago with his entire sales staff after viewing the 1951 models, which won a Fashion Academy gold medal.

APPRAISAL: The tax increase asked by the President would boost Federal levies on most big corporations about 17½ percent and would reduce net earnings around 10.5 percent, according to the Wall Street Journal. Here is an approximate sample of how the tax would apply to 1950 first half profits of some major firms:

	Share net as reported	After tax increase
Bethlehem Steel	$5.63	$4.86
General Corp	4.54	4.05
General Motors	10.90	10.12
U. S. Steel	4.08	3.51
Union Carbide	2.11	1.89
General Electric	2.61	2.32

Following the new tax proposals, utilities dipped sharply and their average this week hit a new low for 1950. The investors' theory is that increasing taxes and costs may hurt this industry because of the time lag in obtaining rate increases.

EARNINGS: Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. yesterday reported earnings of $5,917,742, equal to $2.23 a share, for the quarter ended June 30. This compared with $4,999,445, or $1.87 a share, in the second quarter last year. For the first half of the year, the company listed earnings of $10,291,475, equal to $3.85 a share, compared with $9,877,428, or $3.69 a share, in the first half of 1949. . . Pepperell Manufacturing Co. reported earnings of $4,422,000, equal to $9.10 a share, in a preliminary report for the year ended June 30. This compared with $5,491,085, or $11.29 a share, in the previous year. Other earnings reports follow:

Profit Reports Help to Push Prices Ahead

New York, July 29 (AP).—A rich diet of fat profit reports strengthened the stock market this week.

The market needed a tonic after the shock of President Truman's tax increase proposals and other developments. Leading corporations were quick to oblige with their earning statements for the June quarter.

General Motors reported the largest profit in the second quarter for any company in the history of American finance.

Only once in the long history of U. S. Steel Corp. has that industrial giant earned more.

Smaller fry in the industrial world frequently reported startling increases in their income as compared with the first quarter of this year or the second quarter last year.

Stock traders had a lot to cope with though, despite excellent corporate news.

The President made his tax increase proposals and requests for allocation and priority controls and issued his mid-year economic report, a decisive battle raged in Korea and wholesale and retail prices took another step ahead.

Elder statesman Barney Baruch proposed all-out control power for the president, congressional sentiment seemed to be veering toward an excess profits tax plus complete economic controls, and Russia announced her return to the United Nations.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 29 (AP).—It was pretty much of a buyers' market on the Board of Trade today. There were so few buyers around that when they asked for price concessions, they got them. As a result, prices declined in all pits.

Losses ran up to several cents, a fair-sized drop. They occurred despite the fact that selling never became very heavy. Good crop growing weather, uncertainty regarding price control agitation, peace rumors and sale of Manchurian beans and corn to Europe caused the selling.

Wheat ended 1⅜ to 2 cents lower, corn ⅝ to 2⅜ lower, oats ½ to 1 cent lower, rye unchanged to ¾ lower, soybeans 4 to 5¾ lower and lard 33 to 37 cents a hundred pounds lower.

Much trade attention was focused on news the Senate Banking Committee would vote on Monday on a measure to give the President control over wages, prices and rationing. It would roll back prices to the highest level recorded in the month preceding the outbreak of Korean fighting on June 25.

The range follows:

Railroad Car Orders Hitting Steady Pace

Pittsburgh, July 29. (AP). — The nation's long standing freight car shortage is being attacked on many fronts.

Orders are flowing to car builders. Employment is picking up in hard-hit plants. New rolling stock is moving out to railroads.

There's still a long way to go.

The Association of American Railroads said this week the box car supply is tight throughout the country. It notes a new increase in demands for cars from shippers.

In Pittsburgh, the Allegheny Regional Advisory Board warned "the worst railroad car shortage in our hisotry" may come in a few months.

The coal industry is suffering in spots from a lack of hopper cars. An operator association official said if a defense emergency should call for greatly expanded coal production, the industry's efforts to comply would be hampered by a car shortage. He said some mines can't get enough empties to work more than three to five days a week.

With the outbreak of war in Korea, industrial and government officials recognized the need for infusing new life into the program.

Individual railroads have started to place large orders. The Chesapeake and Ohio announced it has ordered 4000 cars. The Pennsylvania is reported to have ordered 5000 in addition to 10,000 it will acquire under a recent lease arrangement. The New York Central is said to have closed on 5000 cars.

The Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing Co. said it has received an order for 1000 of the cars for the Chesapeake and Ohio. Pullman Standard now has ord rs for 9,000 cars. Three thousand of the total will go to the Pennsy.

Maryland Tobacco

Baltimore, July 29 (AP).—Prices moved upward and activity remained steady on Southern Maryland tobacco auction markets this week.

The Federal-State Tobacco Market News Service said today net sales totaled 2,676,796 during the week, for an average of $45.05 per hundredweight.

Sales for the season through July 28 reached 32,793,660 pounds for an average of $47.91.

Price gains were mainly $1 to $3 with the big increases generally in the lower quality offerings.

Most baskets continued to consist of low to good heavy crop, fair and good thin crop and fair seconds and tips.

The Maryland Tobacco Cooperative, operating under the Government loan program, received about 6 percent of the week's net auction sales, bringing deliveries for the season to about 7½ percent.

Net receipts of the Baltimore hogshead market for the season were listed as approximately 4,817,000 pounds.

The auction markets are scheduled to close after sales August 10. The news service said that beginning Monday one set of buyers will alternate between the La Plata and Waldorf markets. A sale will be held at each point daily.

Auction bid averages per 100 pounds on a limited number of representative U. S. grades, with changes from last week:

Heavy crop—Good cherry red 67.00, up 2.00; fair cherry red 63.00, up 4.00; fair red 42.00, up 3.00; fair green 17.00, up 50 cents; low red 26.00, up 1.00.

American Woolen Refuses New Sales, Blames Confusion

New York, July 29 (AP).—The American Woolen Co., world's largest manufacturer of woolen and worsted fabrics, today withdrew all of its lines from new sales until further notice.

The company said the confused situation on raw wool supplies and costs anad uncertain demands led to the action.

American Woolen, like many large textile manufacturers, has orders enough to keep its mills busy for some months to come.

Many manufacturers have sold their producing capacity through the remainder of this year and into the first quarter of next.

Many large mills, especially cotton textile producers have withdrawn from the market in the past few weeks for similar reasons.

The attitude is they don't want to get their bookings too far ahead when the price and supply situation is uncertain.

The action means simply no further orders will be taken for the time being.

Here Is How New Credit Curbs Work

By James Marlow

THE Housing and Home Finance Agency is the top Government outfit to help people buy, build or repair homes.

It has three important branches: Federal Housing Administration, Home Loan Bank Board, and Public Housing Administration. President Truman has told all three to tighten up on the help they give. Here's what they do and what Mr. Truman told them to do.

1. Federal Housing Administration.

You want to buy, build or repair a home. You need money. You borrow from a bank.

To encourage banks to make such loans, by protecting them against loss, the FHA insures such home loans.

The FHA had more than $1,250,000,000 with which it could insure such loans. Now Mr. Truman says it can use only $650,000,000.

Further, the FHA now will give 5 percent less insurance to a bank than it did. Example:

Until the President's order the FHA insured a loan on a one-family house up to 80 percent of the cost, for a maximum of $16,000. Now it will insure up to only 75 percent and the maximum has been reduced to $14,000.

Also—In insuring a loan, the FHA now must figure out what a house cost before July 1, not what it might cost some time after that date because of inflated prices.

As to loans for repairs on your home: until now, if the bank did not require you to make a down payment, the FHA would insure such a home-repair loan 100 percent, up to $10,000.

But now you must make a down payment of at least 10 percent on any FHA-insured loan you can get for repairs, although the FHA still will insure such a loan up to $10,000.

(This change about repair-loans goes into effect August 1. Every other change listed in this story already is in effect.)

2. Public Housing Administration.

In 1949 Congress passed a law to help cities build low-rent housing units for low-income families. A unit is a place where one family can live.

The cities could borrow from the PHA to do the building. This money had to be paid back. But, after the units were built, under the law the PHA could make gifts of money to the cities to help run the units.

In six years, or by 1956, about 810,000 units were to be built, for an average of 135,000 a year. Under the law, no less than 50,000 and no more than 200,000 could be built in any one year.

Now Mr. Truman has told the PHA to put a brake on the whole program, permitting no more than 30,000 units to be built in the next six months.

3. Home Loan Bank Board.

This agency gives credit to savings banks and loan outfits which make loans to people for buying or building homes. (This credit, unlike insurance, gives banks a backlog of money to draw on for making loans.)

Now Mr. Truman has ordered the HLBB to cut down on the amount of credit it can give banks. There's no need to go into details on this. Bankers already know it and understand it. It involves them.

As for the public—this crack-down simply means getting home loans from banks has been made a little tougher.

Truman Order:

Less VA Help For Home Buying Vets

THE WAR veteran will now get just a little less help from the Veterans' Administration in buying a home.

This is the result of President Truman's order to Government agencies to tighten up a bit in their help to home-buyers.

If the veteran needs money to buy a home, he borrows from a bank or some other private lender.

Until July 19 it was all right with VA if the lender didn't require any down payment at all.

VA would go ahead and guarantee the bank against loss on the loan up to 60 per cent of it, or a total of $7500.

Actually, in most cases, some down payment was required by the lender. But VA made a slight change in this.

Now—in some cases—the veterans must make a down payment of at least 5 percent of the cost of the home before VA guarantees the loan.

But—in other cases—the veteran still doesn't have to make a down payment if the lender doesn't require and VA will still guarantee it.

When does he have to make the minimum down payment of 5 percent, and when doesn't he?

He does not when he borrows from a "supervised" lender. That is, a bank or other institution which is subject to State or Federal supervision, such as auditing.

But—if he borrows from a non-supervised lender, then the veteran must make the minimum down payment of 5 percent.

Yet, there's something else which comes in here.

Even though he borrows from a "supervised" lender and does not have to make the down-payment, the veteran now must pay the "closing" costs on his home-buying.

"Closing" costs mean the cost of having the title to the property examined, and so on. Until July 19 VA permitted the veteran to include the "closing" costs in the loan.

Here's something else: In appraising the value of a house—before guaranteeing a loan on it—VA will figure what the house cost before July 1. If the cost has risen since July 1, then—

In deciding how much guarantee it will give, VA will recognize and allow for the increase cost only in special cases. Otherwise, it will base its guarantee on the cost before July 1.

Trouble-Free Finishes Will Make Family Living Easier

By Harriet Morrison

TABLE tops, fabrics and wall coverings that allow childen to romp, teen-agers to entertain and parents to remain calm are needed in every household at one time or another. Particularly in this day and age when children have taken over the house.

We've come a long way from the Victorian household in which children were banished to the back of the house. Homes are planned with the activities of family members, including children, in mind today.

So are furnishings.

Plastic finishes, fabrics, tile and marble are among easy-to-care-for materials for tables, chests, chairs, curtains and draperies that keep arriving in new guises for present-day homes.

More recent designs with sturdy qualities have the advantage of being beautiful as well as practical. They don't have to be confined to activity areas of a house.

'Retreat' Room

THE family possessing a room that is a "retreat" where parents can enjoy a quiet evening surrounded by their more perishable belongings may select plastic materials for sheer beauty rather than practicality. For "family" rooms, the plastics are chosen for their durability as well as good looks.

Not every house has a separate "retreat" area and activity room. If one living room must serve everyone's needs, the only solution is to change the room to meet the needs of the family at various stages of growth.

When the children are small, surroundings that allow them to be at home may be different than when the children are in their teens. When the children are grown, the room can change again.

Changing draperies and upholstery is a good way to meet needs at different times. Plastic fabrics in sheer curtains or heavy textured designs for draperies have the advantage of being washable, waterproof and resistant to stains, mildew and fading.

Designs by Plastron due in stores this September include sheer fabric and a heavy damask. Patterns vary from a one-color tone etched diamond to a satin stripe effect, a scenic and a formal floral motif. These come in chartreuse, gray gold, soft blue, green and a Dubon net shade.

Koroseal is another plastic fabric available in a variety of patterns as well as plain colors in more than one weight. Soap and water remove stains.

Fabric wall coverings, such as Sanitas, that are crack-resistant, washable, durable and inexpensive as well as decorative are wonderful for hallways, living areas or any room subject to much use. What's more, these coverings are a good treatment for uneven walls of older houses.

Micarta and formica are two plastic laminated materials often used for coffee table tops, desks or dining tables as well as kitchen counters.

August, '50, Belongs to Swanson

By Richard L. Coe

SOME 25 YEARS ago the ballroom of Hollywood's Ambassador Hotel was jammed with the posh movie great to pay homage to a picture queen who'd come home from Europe with a bona fide title.

Gloria Swanson, dream queen of millions, had come back as the Marquise de la Falaise de la Coudraye. The golden twenties was in full tilt and so was the tilt-nosed Swanson.

"I kept thinking at the time," says Gloria today, "that I wished all that fuss could have been over something I'd done, not simply a marriage I'd made. It was all so unreal and while I was delighted to accept it all, I knew it for what it was.

"This year a swell thing happened. I was in Hollywood for a preview of my newest film, 'Sunset Boulevard' and the next afternoon found myself as one of many models in a charity fashion show in the same ballroom. It was the cream of the current glamour world and many of the old names as well. My daughter and I had agreed to team up as models. But once we got out on the floor, Michelle went only halfway, leaving the spotlight on me. That audience had all been at the picture's preview and the cheering applause they gave me for my work compensated for that funny afternoon years before in the same ballroom. The two scenes, past and present, filled my mind and I guess I came nearer tears then than ever in my life."

The month that will begin this week will see "Sunset Boulevard" open across the land. It's been generously previewed by Paramount, a trick the studios use only for their better product and already Miss Swanson has been the subject of countless magazine stories.

Personally, she's an immensely shrewd and down-to-earth woman. Her talk is as simple as her diet, a fresh fruit and salad-sans-salt menu that gives her a figure a teen-ager would be proud to own. Movies are but one facet of life that interests her. She can talk politics with the best, and her knowledge of metallurgy, carbides, alloys and chemistry astounds men who've made such their life's work.

"You know," she says, "I've never really retired from the screen, though people insist on saying this is a comeback for me. I've just had to wait for what seem to be the right parts.

"The role I play in 'Sunset Boulevard,' for instance, was one that only a few people could play and, at that, when the decision was finally made, it was trimmed to suit the parts I'd been associated with. Had Mary Pickford or Norma Talmadge made the film, Brackett and Wilder would have developed other aspects of Norma Desmond's screen career. Naturally, it's not my character they're telling you about, for the only things Norma and I have in common are the fact we both worked for DeMille and Von Stroheim."

It is certainly true that Norma Desmond, the bizarre onetime star who murders her young lover in 'Sunset Boulevard,' is not like Gloria.

For Gloria's too down-to-earth for that. For 12 years she's been the very active head of Multiprises, which she organized to discover and promote foreign patents. She's tackled stage plays and she was the first big star to start her own television show. She's brought up three children and the only thing she seems to regret is her inability to form a happy marriage. She tried five times—the first was the late Wallace Beery, in the War Helping Radio Against Television

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, July 29 (AP).—The Korean war and the preparedness program have strengthened radio's role and put off its day of reckoning with television.

The defense program, at the very least, will slow down the manufacture of television sets and equipment for new stations. It may result in a continuation of the 22-month freeze on permits for new video stations.

The crisis serves as a reminder to the Government—and to commercial sponsors—that radio reaches 41 million American homes. Although gaining sensationally, television still reaches only six and three-quarter million homes.

The diversion of materials and radio and television parts to the defense program will tend to keep radio in a dominant role longer and put the brakes on television's headlong rush.

Ironically, if an excess profits tax should be imposed on business as expected, it probably would give a boost to radio and television programming.

Manufacturers whose earnings became subject to the levy could get tax credit, as business expense, for money spent on sponsoring programs—as during and immediately after World War II. This probably would channel a good deal of advertising revenue into both radio and television.

Aim at Day Audience

IT'S too early to tell yet what will develop, but already some sponsors who had been planning to put all their eggs in the television basket are inquiring about spots for fall radio shows.

However, there has been a continuing trend by sponsors to aim their radio shows at daytime audiences because of television's growing share of the night audience.

Bob Hope's sponsor for the past several seasons recently gave up his night radio show to expand in daytime radio and television. Hope picked up another sponsor. The sponsors of George Burns and Gracie Allen cancelled their show at the end of the past season to switch to daytime radio, plus television. There are trade reports George and Gracie may turn up in a daytime show themselves, for a new sponsor.

The roster of daytime shows include many programs and performers long familiar to night radio audiences. Among them are Arthur Godfrey, Bing Crosby, Art Linkletter, Lanny Ross, and programs like "Double or Nothing," "Strike It Rich" and "Winner Take All."

Name Is Changed

PHILIP MORRIS, sponsor of Johnny Olsen's old standby of daytime radio, "Ladies Be Seated," gave it an overhauling this week. The name was changed to "Johnny Olsen's Luncheon Club" and the whole format of the show was revised.

In keeping with another trend in radio, the decline of the give-away, the Olsen show cut out the award of major prizes and shifted the stress more strongly to entertainment values.

The program is designed entirely for the women in the radio audience, and in the studio. It is intended to provide a feminine counterpart, on the air, to men's civic and service clubs.

The United States' monopoly on television in the Western Hemisphere has been ended. Stations in San Paulo, Brazil, and Mexico City have begun operations with test patterns. Both were equipped by a United States firm, Radio Corp. of America.

The number of television sets in use in this country should pass the seven-million mark sometime in August. Hugh M. Beville, jr., director of plans and research for the National Broadcasting Co., says 6,510,500 were in use July 1—A gain of 296,400 during June. The low June total reflected the summer slump in set sales, which has been ended abruptly in a buying rush stimulated by uncertainties growing out of the Korean crisis. The July and August totals should be much higher—equalling or surpassing the 508,000 new sets installed in March.

In Korea Picture

TELEVISION, lacking the flexibility of radio on a worldwide basis, nevertheless has been getting into the Korean picture. An example is covering meetings of the U. N. Security Council at Lake Success. These telecasts have run an hour or more.

In this same category have been Senate committee hearings at Washington for consideration of intensified defense plans.

Paul Green's Work

Sesqui Drama Opens in Park Friday

PRESIDENT and Mrs. Truman and Miss Margaret Truman have been invited to head the premiere audience for "Faith of Our Fathers" Friday night at the new Sesquicentennial Amphitheater in Rock Creek Park.

Paul Green's symphonic drama about George Washington and the city he founded will have its official opening the next night, which has been designated as "Veterans Night" and will be attended by all the national commanders of the various veteran organizations.

"Faith of Our Fathers" will be the highlight of the National Capital's 150th birthday celebration. Mr. Green has been devoting the past year to it.

Like North Carolina's "The Lost Colony" and Virginia's "The Common Glory," "Faith of Our Fathers" will unite words, music and dance to recreate American history. While there has always been a tendency to call his works "pageantry," Green prefers the term "symphonic dramas."

The leading role of George Washington will be acted by Charles F. McClelland, of New York, who has spent 20 years in the theater and allied mediums. His wife will be played by Mary Miller, of Winchester, Va.

The Sesqui amphiteater is near 16th street and Colorado ave., nw. Of its 4056 seats, 1836 are priced at 90 cents, 1350 at $1.80 and 870 at $2.40. These are on sale at the theater daily from 10 until 6 and with the opening of the play will be available until the 8:30 starting time.

Tickets on Sale

DOWNTOWN several ticket agencies are handling seats, including Mrs. Stabler's in Brentano's, 1322 F st., Campbell's, 1108 G st. and the two Super Music City stores, 1350 F st. and 1110 Seventh st.

L. Poe Leggette, of George Washington University, is the production executive for the event and William Vorenberg has directed the drama with Author Green. Rehearsals have been going on for the past two weeks on the new open air stage.

To protect patrons from rain, a large shed circles the back of the amphitheater. Sesqui officials are hopeful that the rain which has dogged the National Symphony's Watergate concerts will have soon run itself dry.

Historical figures appear throughout the drama. Thomas Jefferson will come to life in Orel Leonard. Thomas Mifflin, president of the Congress, will be played by Peter Jerome. Governor Clinton of New York will be played by Lawrence Ryie. Alexander Hamilton will be acted by William Flaherty.

John Tate to Perform

WASHINGTON'S Negro manservant, a rich role, will be in the hands of John Tate, another professional actor who has appeared here in "Anna Lucasta" and "Tobacco Road." His girl, Hannah, will be acted by Roxie Roker of the Howard University Players.

Lawrence Strawbridge, a George Washington University standby, has the juvenile lead, with Joan Rowe as his sweetheart. Thomas Seldon will be his rival.

Other leading roles will be acted by Hugh Palmerston, Henry Schully, Andrew Nilles and Edre Ferguson. Commentators will be Emery Smith and Davie Rogers.

The dancing has been designed by Barbara Cole, a Washington dancer who has had roles with the New York musicals and with Ballet Theater.

Performances will be given nightly except Monday through September 30.

Two Radio Personalities

'Sunshine Boy' and 'Caliban'

By Sonia Stein

ENTIRELY by coincidence, the last two additions to the WCFM staff are "The Sunshine Boy" and a brooding Prince of Darkness.

Cody Pfanstiehl, a cheery and humorous young man who discusses what goes on "Inside Pfanstiehl" every Tuesday night at 7:45, is so thoroughly optimistic and kindly he is almost an anomoly in the business world. (He spends the major part of his week extolling the virtues of WTOP as its press and promotion chief.)

Dr. William B. Ober, an acid young man who provides the commentary on the new Sunday night (8 p. m.) series of Haydn and Mozart concerts, is a doubting type, full of distaste. (He spends the major part of his week doing undoubtedly pathological things in the Armed Forces' Institute of Pathology. He would like to retreat into the eighteenth century.

"I drive an Oldsmobile 88, but I'd rather drive an old-fashioned Edwardian electric or be carried around in a sedan chair by two strapping Nubians," he remarks with an air of ennui and a Boston accent. Ober's friends, who are many, consider 99 percent of his manner a provocative facade. Does Ober do and say things for effect? "But of course," he says, "I don't like to be purposeless."

Two competent psychiatrists have offered to analyze him free, but "I steadfastly decline because, although I agree with Socrates' dictum 'know thyself,' I feel there are some facts no man should have to face about himself."

Pfanstiehl, on the other hand, has been exposing his soul in a series of exhaustive journals since he started college. These have turned out to be wholesome essays which bear reading by others and some of them will be included in future Pfanstiehl broadcasts.

Ober's literary works have included a novel "which I made haste to destroy. It was about a sensitive young man; I will say no more." and a number of poems, some of which he coauthored with Novelist Howard Nemerov in their Harvard undergraduate days. "Some of the less erotic of my poems were published in 'Furioso,'" he adds.

All of his literary efforts, except for musical notes which he writes for the Haydn Society of Boston of which he is both a founder and a trustee, and other musical notes for various recording firms, he keeps fairly obscure.

Ober also contributes, appropriately enough, to a publication called "The Enigma," which deals with cryptograms, rebuses, anagrams, enigmas, flats, forms and other exotic puzzles. His father was at one time president of the National Puzzler's League and regards Bill as his most puzzling contribution to society. Between them they claim to have the largest collection of limericks in Precinct 2, Brookline, Mass.

COMING back to an atmosphere of light and good will, Pfanstiehl is so thoroughly loved by people who know him well that one friend remarked huffily to a new Pfanstiehl acquaintance who professed to like him thoroughly. "Hmmmph, you can't possibly know how wonderful he is until you need a shirt and he gives you the one off his back." This he does. Busy with all manner of duties at WTOP, Cody still keeps track of jobs available and jobless availabilities among his friends and tries to get them together. He is always there in a crisis, holding hands, mopping

Berlioz Requiem To Thunder Here

By Paul Hume

FOR the purposes he had in mind in writing his Requiem, Hector Berlioz found he needed 190 instruments and 210 voices.

In addition to these, he wanted additional timpani and brass choirs to be used only in the Tuba Mirum.

These physical elements, together with regard for the building in which the work was to be performed, dictated much of the form and nature of the music.

The Chapel of Saint Louis at the Invalides in Paris is a vast, domed building. On the occasion of the first hearing of the Requiem, Berlioz knew that it would be packed full of people—that windows would be blocked and walls draped.

Further, Berlioz knew that the state funeral, for which he was writing the Requiem, would open with a cortege of drums and organ music. Thus he desired a combination of massive tone, high drama and religious awe.

Things will be different on Wednesday and Thursday this week when the Requiem is heard for the first time in Washington.

First of all, it will be given out of doors. With microphones, musical effects are possible of which Berlioz may not even have dreamed. But the factor for which we hope is that the microphones will bring to the ear something of the texture and tone quality Berlioz had in mind in writing his great work.

Auxiliary Barge

THE Requiem will be sung and played at the Watergate. An auxiliary barge has been placed in front of the large concert barge. On the smaller platform will be grouped the 16 timpani called for in the Day of Judgment scene. There will also be the additional brass choirs, and a part of the National Symphony.

On the larger barge, the chorus will be massed at the back, with only the strings and woodwinds of the orchestra in front of them.

A large canvas cover has been rented for the days surrounding the performances, to insure protection in rehearsing, in spite of weather conditions.

The amplification system will also be included in the rehearsal to attempt to achieve something of Berlioz' conception.

LLOYD

Paul Callaway will conduct the immense score with the Sesquicentennial Chorus. The only soloist required for the Requiem is a tenor, who sings the opening solo in the Sanctus. There is also a passage in the "Quid sum miser" in the Dies Irae for tenors in chorus or solo. This and the Sanctus will be sung by Mr. David Lloyd.

Of this very passage, "Quid sum miser," Berlioz said, "It is the first of those pages of the Requiem too often overlooked among the tremendous because it requires a very fine musical sensibility to enjoy their style."

Ibsen Drama at Olney

LUISE RAINER in a Broadway-bound drama by Henrik Ibsen forms the unusual bill for the coming week at the Olney Theater.

The play is "The Lady From the Sea," which the following week will open as the second attraction of the Theater Festival under Sam Wanamaker's direction in New York.

Winner of two Academy Awards in as many years, a unique achievement, Miss Rainer is best recalled for her prize - winning roles in "The Good Earth" and "The Great Ziegfeld," contrasting ones indeed. Her countless screen appearances have caused audiences to forget that her stage career has been equally notable.

She played leading roles under Max Reinhardt and her first role on the London stage led to the M-G-M contract that was to make her an American favorite.

Just before the war, she made a return to the stage in this city, a full-week benefit for the Red Cross in Shaw's "Saint Joan."

Ibsen's drama about a woman torn between her devoted husband and her sea-faring lover was a favorite of the great Eleanora Duse and its revival in New York will be its first since 1934. It's also a role long associated with Blanche Yurka.

LOUISE RANIER
. . . in 'Lady From the Sea'

Miss Rainer's supporting company will be a notable one of familiar players, Theodore Newton, Herbert Berghof, Steven Hill, Joan Chandler, Anne Jackson and Jeff Morrow.

The Ibsen drama opens Tuesday night at Olney, where it will run through Sunday evening, with Saturday and Sunday matinees. The Olney's downtown box office is in Jordan's 13th and G sts.

'Kiss Me Kate' Opens Aug. 14

SEATS will go on sale Wednesday morning for the two-week run of "Kiss Me Kate." The Cole Porter musical comedy will open at the Watergate on August 14. Mrs. Stabler's ticket bureau in Brentano's, 1322 F st. will start the ticket sale this Wednesday.

Frances McCann and Robert Wright head the cast of the Saint Subber and Lemuel Ayers production. This is the National Company, now completing an extended Boston run. Benny Baker, Marc Platt and Betty George head the supporting cast.

Porter's score for the Sam and Bella Spewack novelty based on "The Taming of the Shrew" includes such hits as "So in Love," "Wunderbar," "True to You in My Fashion" and "Too Darn Hot."

During its Watergate stay, "Kate" will play seven nights a week, with no matinees, from the 14th through Sunday the 27th. The price scale will be $3.60 and $3 for reserved orchestra seats, $1.80 for unreserved chairs and $1.20 for general admission.

Molnar Comedy Opens at McLean Tuesday

FERENC MOLNAR'S comedy, "The Play's the Thing" will open a week's run Tuesday night at the McLean Summer Theater, Virginia.

McLean's Straw Hat Players will run the play through next Sunday evening. The Arnold Bus Line runs a special nightly bus to the theater, leaving 11th and E sts. at 7:45 and returning to town after the performance.

Gloria's Trouble: She Paid the Bills

days when he was a young and handsome leading man and she was an 18-year-old.

The concensus of Gloria and her friends is that the situation was against her. She frankly remarks: "When I was young no man my age was rich enough to support me in the style I quickly got used to. I never kidded myself about all the luxuries I enjoyed. I loved every minute of it. But what made all my marriages hopeless was that I paid the bills. The men couldn't take it and I don't blame them."

Though Gloria spent her $20,000 per week like water, she's far from broke at 52. Her assortment of jobs brings her in about $25,000 a year; she headquarters in a lovely Fifth Avenue apartment, where the phone rings regularly on the minute.

She's shrewd about clothes and also generous with them, recognizing that fashion is a vast business. On a tour of the country which she winds up this week in Hollywood, she was equipped for several changes a day in each city she visited.

"People expect me to look smart, so it's part of my stock in trade. I have to spend six to eight thousand a year on clothes and, frankly, if it were up to me, I'd be happier in a few house dresses. But, after all, I'm a business woman."

And because she's a business woman, she has no complete trust in anything until the public has accepted it. Many screenings of "Sunset Boulevard" across the country have resulted in preliminary whoops of approval from the critics, but until it's registered with the box office public, Gloria's not allowing herself to be fooled. She knows that it's going against tradition to give so realistic a view of Hollywood as this picture does.

However, for those who admire what the movies can do when they get cracking "Sunset Boulevard" is a hum-dinger. It's a corking good story, filled with endless touches of real life and curiously enough, boasts the first real acting job ever to fall Gloria's way in her 36-year movie career.

She's never been much of an actress, hasn't had to be, but the pathetic creature she makes of Norma Desmond is bound to go down as one of the most memorable screen acting performances. Flamboyant and infinitely pathetic, Gloria's Norma is a remarkable characterization.

It will open in Washington in a few weeks, but since your reviewer is about to start his vacation, he hopes Miss Sonia Stein, who'll be theater-going the next three weeks, will forgive his ungallant filching of what may be her best assignment. By all means, see "Sunset Boulevard" and I guarantee you'll be seeing one of the Oscar-winners of the year.

Musical Stiff Shirts Un-Starched

By Garth Jones

AUSTIN, Texas, July 29 (AP).—The youthful conductor of the Austin Symphony is taking the starch out of stiff shirt music in Texas.

"I want to get good music to the people and I don't care what tricks I have to use to do it," says Ezra Rachlin, 34. Rachlin's "tricks" include such unorthodox methods as drive-in concerts and disc jockey radio programs.

An Austin Symphony audience is likely to include legislators, lobbyists, students, educators, ranchers, oil men, soldiers and a lot of plain people tired of Sunday movies and radio comedians. So far, Rachlin has them all rocking back on their musical heels.

"My aim is fairly simple," he says. "It's the viewpoint which American conductors, especially the younger ones, are gradually coming around to. Make it easy for people to listen to good music and they will come to hear you—and enjoy it."

Two or three times a week Rachlin talks to service clubs, civic organizations, parent-teacher groups, or any gathering which will invite him and usually he gets a good hearing—and some ticket sales.

The Austin orchestra rehearses in a city fire hall. Most of the members are professional. "We have some University of Texas students who are 'embryo professionals' and a few who were once professionals and two or three talented amateurs," Rachlin said.

EZRA RACHLIN, EASY-GOING MAESTRO
. . . rehearses symphony in fire hall

LAST November, Rachlin bought 70 pairs of sun glasses for his orchestra, dressed them in blue jeans and sport shirts, and trucked them out to a movie drive-in theater. Booted ushers astride rented horses took tickets from about 1600 persons and helped park 400 cars and trucks. The guest soloist, Betty Jean Kimble, daughter of an Arizona rancher, wore a ten-gallon hat. There was no hand-clapping but the blare of 400 auto and truck horns showed that the music was appreciated.

"You don't have to wear a stiff shirt to enjoy music," Rachlin says.

In his half-hour radio program each Sunday—sponsored by an Austin dress shop—Rachlin usually plays three requested serious numbers and a popular selection. Between times he comments informally on the composers, reads requests, makes dedications and generally plugs appreciation of good music.

At the start, to prove that a technical knowledge of music is not necessary to enjoy it, Rachlin interviewed a half dozen businessmen and housewives who claimed they were "musical illiterates." "After talking with them and playing different numbers, I found each had a definite musical taste," he said.

"If we train the youngsters to appreciate good music when they are children, then they will grow up to be an appreciative audience for our symphony," he says.

Rachlin is teaching little Wanda Wiley, the 1950 poster girl, to play the piano. She wears braces on her legs but has full use of her hands and arms.

"She doesn't know a thing about music, which is wonderful," Rachlin said. "I think she will get a lot of happiness out of being able to play the piano."

Born in Hollywood, Calif., Rachlin gave his first piano recital at the age of five—"You know, one of those horrible little beasts in velvet pants."

Before coming to Austin a year ago, Rachlin traveled through the United States, Europe and South Africa for two years as conductor for Lauritz Melchior.

Eddie (WTOP) Gallaher ON RECORDS

Eddie Gallaher, on vacation, presents a guest columnist

By Tony Martin

WHILE your regular columnist is taking a well-earned rest from the regular grind, I've been asked to take over. Thanks for the opportunity to talk to you about something I enjoy—collecting records.

Try not to have a one-track mind where collecting records is concerned. Millions of folks are record fiends and yet only a handful of them have really well-rounded libraries. Why? Because they stick to one type too much. They have shelf after shelf of hot jazz . . . or maybe classical . . . and they consider themselves either too lowbrow or highbrow to get out of their "league" and try something different.

If you want to be a hermit, okay. But if you want to entertain your pals once in a while with potato chips, sandwiches and lot of good music, you ought to be a little more conscientious when on a disc-buying spree. Don't close your eyes and ears to everything but your favorite type of music.

In building a record collection, keep several things in mind:

1. Buy cautiously and wisely. A small but good collection has much more value and enjoyment than a monstrous, poorly-selected one. One's a waste of money; the other invaluable in the pleasure and genuine appreciation you will derive from it.

2. Learn to appreciate all music. Learn to acquire a taste for the deeper types of music, as well as the lighter. If you've never liked classical music, chances are you've never really listened to it. Instead of hastily buying the latest pop tunes, invest that money in an album of classical music. You'll be enjoying it long after those pop tunes have died. Classical music never dies. It grows more beautiful everytime you listen.

3. Buy good arrangements. A really beautiful piece of music can sometimes be massacred when it's recorded by a poor orchestra. And sloppy enunciation by a vocalist can easily kill a lovely or witty set of lyrics.

Perhaps you have been spending your money on Lisa Kirk records, with an occasional musical comedy album thrown in, and maybe a Johnny Long or three. All fine and good. But for spice, why not add a Spike Jones album to your collection?

Once you relax and listen to Ravel's "Bolero" or "Romeo and Juliet," you will say to yourself, "Brother! Look what I've been missing all these years!" And if you play Khatchaturian or Mozart for a while, you might even lose your taste for cornier things.

In your record library you want a well-rounded collection of good music. The test of good music is this: It's lasting. It grows on you. It is never tiring but always lovelier, more inspiring, and more refreshing each time you play it. Bad music is just the opposite. With a little thought, you can avoid spending your money on bad music the next time you drop into a record shop.

And in place of it, you can make another valuable addition to your record collection . . . a collection of which you'll be mighty proud.

Eddie Gallaher (except when he is on vacation) is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9 a.m.; Moondial, 11:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

As a Matter of Living

D.C. Needs Center for Art Exhibits

"STREET SCENE NUMBER THREE"
. . . by June McAdams at the Whyte Gallery.

By Jane Watson Crane

IN THE Capital there is need for an art center where work by contemporary artists of this and other communities could be seen constantly as a matter of course. People would get the habit of dropping in when they could, making their own discoveries, and buying what appealed to them. Special exhibitions might feature the work deemed outstanding, but more important would be the center's function as a clearing house, offering opportunity through frequent changes in the material presented for a large number of artists to have their work seen each year.

Lacking such a center, almost all the existing galleries are making an effort to give the artists a chance to show. The D. C. Public Library has consistently worked toward this end in recent years. Opportunities have been offered by American, George Washington and Howard Universities. Many shops and theaters have cooperated, as well as some of the major institutions.

The difficulty remains that the exhibits are from the point of view of the general public either too formal or not formal enough.

People seeing the shows at places like the Corcoran and Phillips are not apt to think of the works in terms of their own lives, as things to be acquired and enjoyed at home. On the other hand, if they see something they like in a theater lounge or on the walls of a shop or library, they are apt to be timid about buying it for fear of "making a mistake."

Tastes Change

THE ONLY real mistake is in in buying what does not appeal to you personally, either because it is in fashion or because it appeals to someone you admire with more advanced tastes than yours.

Most people who enjoy art as an experience have undergone many changes in taste during their lifetime. If the work is well done and there is conviction behind the creative idea, the chances are that it will grow on you. If the appeal is surface and there is nothing behind it, the work will grow tiresome to look at and you will instinctively be looking for something of a different character next time.

To buy it in the first place was not necessarily a mistake, because you learned by living with it. Real appreciation of art is a fluid and personal thing which cannot be acquired through books and lectures.

Variety in Show

DEALERS' galleries have the advantage of being places where people are accustomed to thinking in terms of purchase. The Whyte Gallery in Washington has served a double purpose in introducing new talent as well as offering work by the more established.

The second in its series of summer shows has refreshing variety. It ranges from paintings by Christina Westerstrom, an American artist of Swedish extraction who has spent the past several years in Europe, to those by Richard Miller, still in his teens, who has won a fellowship from the National Society of Arts and Letters to pursue his art studies at American University.

There are color symphonies by Eugene Fite, assistant to Jacob Kainen at the Smithsonian, and a series of inventive street scenes by June McAdams, one of the ablest and most ingenious of the newcomers.

Several paintings by Andree Roullion, who recently had a one-man show at the Baltimore Museum, are included, and landscapes by Winifred Noble, whose paintings are executed with discipline and conviction. The expression of each one is different, Westerstrom inclining on the one hand to expressionism, Roullion on the other hand to the primitive. The authority and organization of Miller's "Family Portrait" are impressive for the work of so young a man. The McAdams' street scenes would be a welcome addition to any home.

On Solid Ground

JOSE GOMEZ SICRE has written an informative introduction to the exhibition by the Cuban artist, Mirta Cerra, at the United Nations Club. This is her first show in the United States, although she has been exhibiting since 1935 at home. Her formal training was academic and she has advanced cautiously but consistently from this point of departure.

While heads and figures incline to the sentimental and some of the excursions into postimpressionism are a bit stilted, the show as a whole has rare quality and distinction. The design sense is strong and many of the patterns worked out in plastic terms are a delight to the eye. Miss Cerra, we are told, is today an accepted member of the progressive movement among Cuban painters. One can see why she is respected as a painter who is moving forward slowly on solid ground.

Arena Stage Has Comedy By Goldsmith

THE new Arena Stage, which opens with "She Stoops to Conquer" August 16, has its box office open daily from noon till 9 o'clock at the Hippodrome Theater, Ninth and New York avenue.

The picture house is now being renovated to accommodate the central staging venture under the managership of Edward Mangum. Performances will be given nightly except Sunday with Wednesday and Saturday matinees. All evening seats will be $1.90 and all matinee seats $1.50, including tax. Because of the new style in staging no seat is further from the stage than seven rows; two sides of the stage will have but three rows of seats.

Oliver Goldsmith's classic comedy will be the first venture of a new company which includes figures familiar in local acting circles. Henry Oliver will play Squire Hardcastle, with Jnoia Zelenka as Kate. Virginia Thurston wil be Mrs. H., with Lester Rawlins as her son Tony. Dorothea Jackson, Orville French, George Hastings and Henry Danilowicz complete the cast.

Reservations may also be made by phone at District 8592.

Singer Gertrude Niesen will visit Jack Haley Thursday night at 9 (WNBW-NBC) on one of TV's most elaborate summer shows, the new Ford Star Revue

Theater to Open At Viers Mill

A NEW suburban theater, the Viers Mill, will open Thursday night on Viers Mill rd., between Wheaton and Rockville.

Latest in the Sidney Lust chain, it will have a gala send-off beginning at 8 o'clock with vaudeville acts, Brusiloff's orchestra and official greetings from the Governor's mansion at Annapolis.

Jack Carson in "The Good Humor Man" will be the opening attraction.

John Ward Bayly Play To Be Seen Thursday

John Ward Bayly's short play, "Never No Third Degree" will be this Thursday night's offering of the Masquers of Roosevelt Center at their weekly court program at 13th and Upshur sts.

Pauline Eaton Oak has directed the play, which will be preceded by musical and specialty numbers in this series sponsored by the District Recreation Department.

'American Blues' . In Its Final Week

A NEW Englander, now stationed with the Army in Virginia, has had the important job of staging the dances for "American Blues," the collection of three Tennessee Williams short plays which begins its final week Tuesday night at the Cross Roads Theater.

He is Tim Kelley, winner of the Katharine Dunham Choreography and Samuel Leverton Theater awards last year. In Williams' "Ten Blocks on the Camino Real" he appears as the guitar player. Kelley's professional background includes a part for the long run of "Dark of the Moon" on Broadway and roles with the Boston Repertory Theater.

The other two Williams plays on the bill are "The Case of the Crushed Petunias" and "Long Stay but Short."

The theater is located out Columbia Pike at Bailey's Cross Roads. Telephone reservations may be made at Emerson 0095.

Record Player

Rare Score Is Recorded By Ormandy

Kodaly: Harry Janos; also: Ravel: Rapsodie espagnol. Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy. ML 4306. $4.95.

ORMANDY is the only man to record this music, except for one European conductor. He did it years ago with the Minneapolis Symphony, but here he has a vastly finer orchestra, and modern recording that makes this a marvelous record.

Ormandy knows and loves this music and we have never heard him do anything more successfully. The bounce of the czardas is perfectly timed, and the drama of the military comedy, the musical clock, the flavor of the whole piece comes through incredibly.

You probably don't own this music. But go out today and buy this for permanent fun, wonderful music, and a great recording.

With it you get Ormandy's new version of the Rapsodie espagnol of Ravel. Again the tone of the orchestra is gorgeous. I happen to prefer Koussevitsky's treatment of the music, and feel that it has more sensuous phrasing, and more lush rhythmic drive. But Ormandy's is handsome to hear, and only less beguiling if compared to the Boston version—even then you may prefer the Phillies.

By all means get this for the Kodaly, and you will have a fine account of the Ravel too.

Delibes: Sylvia; also Delibes: Coppelia. Paris Conservatory Orchestra under Desormiere. London Decca LPS 184 and 183. $4.95 each.

TWO ten-inch London recordings of some favorite Delibes music.

The orchestra plays this as it should go—Desormiere is superb conductor for opera and ballet. The results are as good as you could ask, if you love this music. For light ballet, dinner, and background, it has plenty in its favor, and few superiors in recording. The Boston Pops also has a recording of much of this, for the same money, their 78 against this 33 and 1/3.

Bach: Partita No. 4 in D Major. Rosalyn Tureck, pianist. Allegro AL 42. $4.95.

ROSALYN TURECK has the reputation of being the finest pianist playing Bach today—though some would give that honor to Rudolf Serkin. Miss Tureck has made more of a specialty of Bach's music on the piano than Serkin, or any other of the famous pianists.

Surely she understands the style, technical and artistic shadings of the great master, whose death occurred two hundred years ago last Friday.

In this suite we have a French overture, allemande courante, aria, sarabande, menuet, and gigue. There are piano recordings of some of the partitas, and harpsichord versions of some. This is the first recording of which we find any listing, on either instrument.

The playing is handsome and the engineering equal to it. While we prefer the harpsichord, you can learn much, and enjoy much on this record. Allegro intends to record the entire "Clavieruebung," for which they deserve all praise and support.

Lloyd Soloist For Requiem

In that statement is a key clew to the character of the entire score. The text of the Requiem Mass is such that it lends itself to moments of great drama—moments best expressed through ponderous musical ideas, cloaked in weighty sounds.

The Italianate Requiems of Verdi, Pergolesi, Sgambati and Cherubini, tend to overemphasize this factor. Their settings are generaly considered operatic, and often accused of being bombastic.

Mozart's Requiem, too, contains musical elements common to his operatic writing; but the loftiness of his ideas makes both the operas and the Requiem seem well adapted to their mediums.

Spurned Latin Text

SUCH a man as Brahms, a Lutheran, declined to use the Latin text of the Requiem, a Catholic service, for his Requiem, and chose passages from Old and New Testaments instead.

Not in between any of these, but simply of a wholly different substances, arising from a different cultural and spiritual background, comes the Berlioz Requiem.

In the traditional language of the Catholic Church, in music as Gallic as any we know, its very Gallicisms becoming a standard for the French composers of a succeeding century to follow, Berlioz has imprinted his own musical conceptions in a work unique among all compositions, whether of religious or secular connotation.

Its overwhelming climaxes last far less time than its pages of quiet contemplative statements. Its instrumental scoring presents certain rare facets for the first time in musical history—facets that a Prokofieff, a Shostakovich and a Stravinsky have been happy enough to borrow in our time.

Its choral writing will appear clear, unblurred, and of striking ease and comprehensiveness.

The Gulbenkian loan collection has arrived from Europe and will be exhibited in the fall, exact date, as yet undetermined.

THE art school of the National Academy of Design in New York, which this year celebrated its 125th anniversary, will reopen October 2 with a teaching staff composed of Leon Kroll, Robert Phillipp, Ogden Pleissner, and Ralph Fabri. The school was forced to close in 1948, for lack of suitable space. It will be situated in a wing of the building at 3 E. 89th st., until the Academy is able to go ahead with its new building program. Vernon Porter has been appointed director.

LAMAR DODD and Peter Hopkins have been awarded grants of $1000 each from the National Institute of Arts and Letters for work in the fine arts. Both are painters. Dodd is well-known as a leader of art activity in the South. Hopkins is a New York painter.

ROBERT GOLDWATER, editor of the Magazine of Art, published by The American Federation of Arts, has been awarded a Fulbright fellowship and plans to study in France. During his absence James Thrall Soby will become acting editor of the magazine. Managing editor is Helen M. Franc, who was with the OWI in Washington during World War II.

STUDENTS of the Washington painter, James Vincent Cupoli, are holding an exhibition of their work in the Colony Lounge, 1737 De Sales st. nw., through August 4.

STANTON CATLIN, who has been director of the American Institute of Graphic Arts, is organizing trips to Mexico for the study of art this summer, with particular stress on Mexican murals. The final excursion extends from August 6 to 27. Mr. Catlin may be reached through his office at 74 Irving Place, New York.

SOON to open at the Playhouse in Washington is a special exhibition arranged by Prentiss Taylor and his committee, showing views of the Potomac as seen by artists of the community.

ALFRED McADAMS will have a one-man show at the Whyte Gallery this fall.

Week's Score

Music List Dominated By Requiem

BIGGEST news in Washington music, and most important musical item in the entire country, comes this Wednesday and Thursday night.

At the Watergate, the Sesquicentennial Chorus, under Paul Callaway, will give the first local performance of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. Because of the proportions of the score, the Requiem is seldom heard either in Ameria or abroad.

The chorus will be supported by an augmented orchestra of 120 instruments. This includes a special complement of four extra brass choirs and a total of sixteen tympani.

The tenor solo opening the Sanctus will be sung by David Lloyd, outstanding concert and oratorio soloist. Mr. Lloyd will also sing the passage, "Quid sum miser" assigned to either tenor solo or full chorus of tenors.

The Requiem will be given on two successive evenings: Wednesday and Thursday.

The Jewish Community Center's "Music under the Stars" concerts of recorded music continue on Tuesday evenings, with music by Wagner, Beethoven, and Strauss this week. There is no change for admission.

The Phillips Gallery presents its final concert until October 1 tomorrow night when Robert Stevenson plays an all-Bach program. This is most appropriate following the 200th anniversary of the death of Bach last Friday.

up emotional wounds and getting things straightened out. It stems from a simple philosophy, "Hate makes the headlines but love makes the world go round."

As for picking a fight, he feels that whatever the issue is, it won't seem important the next day, so you might better postpone it. He was named "The Sunshine Boy" by one of his teachers.

As he explains it, "If you give optimism, happiness and love, you get it back. Sometimes you get it back in the teeth, but not often."

Cody and his wife, Margaret, (a family now augmented by 3-year-old Carla and some practically brand new twins, as you will hear on "Inside Pfanstiehl") have performed in hospitals for veterans. Cody played his violin and Margaret played the piano. And Cody has appeared in an American Veterans Committee show. But the ham in him was stifled nonetheless until he got this WCFM assignment.

Out in Two Years

AT THE University of Chicago, Cody got so involved in running the school paper—being its first freshman night managing editor, emceeing campus shows, doing violin stunts in night clubs—that he didn't quite get around to attending classes. He was invited to leave at the end of two years, partly because of that, and partly because he told a group of alumnae what he really thought of the fraternity system.

The school paper then circumvented rules to keep him as a columnist even after he'd left school. (When he finally left, the paper carried an "obituary" about him.) The column was called "Curds and Whey" and subtitled "From the milk of human kindness, I guess."

Back to the delightful poseur, Bill Ober. He, too, goes all out for friends. "I'll do anything they ask without asking questions," he says. On second thought, he rises to the occasion and says with curled lip, "I have friends because I pander to their weaknesses, chiefly self-love." He adds: "Each one will think he alone is immune to that statement."

For all his rash remarks, Ober is considered a solid citizen, intellectually. He has hit two well-known I.Q. tests for the highest possible score. "Of course, that was many years ago. I doubt if I could exert myself that much again," he says with an air of lassitude. At 29, he intends to get no older, and wears crew cuts and bow ties to achieve his ends. "I don't want people to say, 'He's had lots of experience.' I want them to say, 'My, what a brilliant young man'."

PFANSTIEHL
. . . "Sunshine Boy"

. . . "misanthrope"

"Modesty is a virtue which is completely unknown to me," he adds, somewhat needlessly. He refuses to have his title painted on the door at the Institute. Is this a form of conceit? "Certainly, but it is the most modest form of manifesting my conceit I could find," he explains.

He is a great one for solving problems directly at all costs. The airplanes which mar the Watergate concerts could be taken care of easily. "Now that Mr. Mitchell has shown the way with a cannon, I think two antiaircraft batteries should take care of it," he reasons.

As an air personality, Ober has not yet hit his stride. His first program simply explained the background of the Haydn music played. (The music comes from long playing records contributed by the Haydn Society.) But sooner or later, the acid will show, and WCFM is willing that it should. Ober speaks with a kind of lisp, something he attributes to a "tongue hypertrophied from overuse." But he speaks with authority, and any Sunday now, it'll be with venom, too. Evil will out, we always say.

The Washington Philatelist

$2,891,876 Sold in Year To Collectors of Stamps

By William M. Stuart

THE Postoffice Department has announced that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, sales at the Philatelic Agency totaled $2,891,876.31. While this figure does not constitute a record, it is a factor in demonstrating the agency is still of great importance to the stamp collector.

The agency was established December 1, 1921, and sales the first year amounted to $20,906.50. The best record during the life of the agency was for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, the receipts being $4,136,122.01.

Receipts for the 1948 fiscal year amounted to $2,490,705.16; for 1947, $3,331,291.42 and for 1946, $3,020,692.36.

Collectors have at all times been greatly interested in the agency and the large amounts spent testify to the worth of the Government's aid to stamp collectors. The Postoffice Department takes great pleasure in catering to the collector and continues to handle the finest of stock, despite adverse criticism.

The Philatelic Agency is more firmly established than ever mainly because the material produced by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is the finest. During the years 1935 to 1941, inclusive, more than 10 million dollars was spent by collectors for mint issues.

Sesqui Sale

AT the first day sale of the 3-cent "Gateway to the West" commemorative stamp at Kansas City, Mo., June 3, 1950, there were 405,390 covers canceled and 1,563,475 stamps sold. At the first day sale of the 3-cent Executive National Capital Sesquicentennial commemorative at Washington, D. C., June 12, 1950, there were 576,789 covers canceled and 575,370 stamps sold; and at the Philatelic Agency there were 583,546 stamps sold. At the first day sale of the 3-cent Boy Scouts of America commemorative stamp at Valley Forge, Pa., June 30, 1950, there were 622,972 covers canceled and 1,914,117 stamps sold.

In Bulgaria

UNDER date of July 20, 1950, the Postal Bulletin states: "The importation of postage in Bulgaria is restricted in accordance with Bulgarian regulations. Persons desiring to send stamps should consult the addressees to assure compliance with those regulation states: "New or used postage stamps (admitted only in letters)."

Changes have been made in the rates of air mail postage to Japan as follows: "Letters and post cards, 25 cents per half ounce. Air letter sheets, 10 cents each. Other regular mail articles, 65 cents for the first 2 ounces and 45 cents for each additional 2 ounces.

Joseph H. Spiegeberg, of the Aero Philatelic Exchange, Box 139, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington 4, D. C., has returned to business and will conduct his first sale on August 1. There are 480 lots listed.

Italy has just issued a commemorative stamp honoring Gaudenzio Ferrari, the famous renaissance painter (1480-1546). The stamp is 20 lire, green. In the center is a profile portrait of the artist. His most famous fresco is in the church of Santa Maria delle Grazie at Varallo.

AT the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., on Tuesday evening the speaker was A. J. E. Davis, crown agent of the British Colonies. Recently the British Government established an agency of the crown and all stamp collectors are greatly interested in this new philatelic bureau. He gave a most interesting talk and explained in detail the workings of the bureau and told of the many steps in the printing of the British Colonial stamps throughout the world.

Another meeting of the Club will be held Tuesday at Pythian Temple, 9th st. nw., when an auction is scheduled.

This morning, Major Eliot discusses impressions gathered during his journeys through the Middle East. Future speakers in the "American Christians View Israel" series will include Bartley Crum, John Roy Carlson and Robert St. John.

Radio and Video

Ed Wynn Assigned To Television Series

By C. E. Butterfield

ED WYNN'S new television assignment transferring him from CBS to NBC will set him up as one of four headline acts in another rotating series the network has on the fire for the fall. This removes him as a possibility for the projected Fred Allen-Eddie Cantor series on Sunday nights, because he will be on Wednesdays.

WYNN

Along with Wynn, Jimmie Durante is a prospect, with NBC known to have been negotiating with him. Durante closed his radio series last spring.

Other possibilities are Danny Kaye and Danny Thomas.

The hour is to be 8 to 9, just ahead of the oldest dramatic series in TV, the television theater. Each star would appear every fourth week, with Wynn leading the parade.

Another factor in picking this particular time is that the show will be in competition with the Arthur Godfrey hour on CBS.

It still is not certain who will join Allen and Cantor in their four-act series. Martin and Lewis are among those mentioned.

Meanwhile, Cantor, recently returned from a European trip, will present two music-drama programs in early August to illustrate the working of the Marshall Plan. They were recorded in Paris.

Title Changed

AMERICA UNITED, roundtable discussion series which has been running on NBC several years, is changing title to "The First Freedom." This is in keeping with the plan to stress the concept of freedom of speech in forthcoming discussions. Cooperating in the program are the AFL, CIO, National Grange, American Farm Bureau Federation and United States Chamber of Commerce.

Chico Marx Signs

CHICO MARX, who is following his brother Groucho into television—he'll be on ABC and Groucho on NBC—is going in for comedy, too. He'll play one of the character roles in which he specializes in a musical comedy with a college setting. It's "The Sugar Bowl." The opener is set for 9 p. m. October 2. The program will be put on live from New York . . . Designed to detail the country's defense needs based on Korean developments, six Saturday broadcasts are to be put on by NBC in co-operation with the American Ordnance Association starting next week.

CHICO

Barrymore on Record

THE RECORDED voice of the late John Barrymore will be heard on radio as a late summer replacement.

Titled "John Barrymore and Shakespeare," the program will run four weeks in the Henry Aldrich time on NBC, succeeding the atom bomb program, "The Quick and the Dead," which filled in the first part of the eight-week Aldrich vacation.

Barrymore's part will be taken from recordings of broadcasts he made in 1937, five years before his death. First will come selected passages from "Hamlet," then "Macbeth," "Richard III" and "Twelfth Night."

The People Split

AFTER a series of tests, We the People has decided to split its radio and TV versions into separate broadcasts on a regular basis. Heretofore the identical program went to both mediums at the same time.

The new schedule, effective on NBC at 8:30 last Friday night, patterns the radio version, recorded ahead of time, after the documentary type drama while the video will retain the human interest interviews the program has conducted for 13 years.

Cultural Exchange Plan Opened by Visiting Finns

INAUGURATING an educational exchange program, 32 Finnish graduate students arrived in New York last week. They will study a year at colleges throughout the country. This program is made possible by an act of Congress providing that payments on Finland's World War I debt be set aside to encourage cultural relations between the two countries. The first funds became available with the payment of the December, 1949, installment.

The students will be guests this afternoon at a tea given by the Institute of International Education at the Columbia University Club. Mr. Rafael Seppala, Finnish consul-general in New York, will welcome them.

The institute is administering the graduate student program in cooperation with the Department of State. A Finnish committee of educators and professional people selects the students. The applications are forwarded through the American Legation in Helsinki. The Department of State is responsible for the final selection, and the Institute is responsible for obtaining their admission and supervision. Awards provide travel, maintenance, tuition and an allowance for books and incidentals.

A total of 40 Finnish students will benefit from the program during the 1950-51 academic year. Some will leave this week for summer orientation courses at Yale University, the University of Denver, and other centers before enrolling in regular courses.

Donald J. Shank, vice president of the Institute, said: "I am delighted that this forward-looking act has made increased exchanges with Finland possible. Our two countries have always had close ties. The way in which the Finnish people have honored their debts and the manner in which they have defended their country have been greatly admired by Americans."

The law also provides for American students to study in Finland, for an exchange of specialists between the two countries, and for exchange of educational materials.

Slim Pickin's for College Students in Alaska

College boys from all over the U. S. have formed a small community on the banks of the Chena River in Fairbanks, Alaska, back of the YMCA (left). Still jobless, and battling the high cost of living, they pool food and cook at least one meal a day in their community kitchen (right). Some lack the necessary cash to get back over the border to the United States

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, July 29 (AP).—Fairbanks may have been a bonanza town in the days of yore, but somebody sure "pinched the poke" this year.

Nobody knows that better than the 750 to 1000 college students who came to Fairbanks this summer to seek quick funds for next year's tuition.

They are a bit more optimistic now that the carpenter's strike has ended and construction work has begin to boom again. But there were dark days earlier this summer for many who had pooled their resources, bought any kind of a jalopy with four wheels and traveled the Alaskan highway only to find that the rumored "gold-paved streets" in the boomtown of Alaska's interior were fantastic exaggerations.

They came in spite of repeated warnings that work was scarce and that Alaska residents would be given preference. They arrived to find strikes and work stoppages had shoved the short construction season back about 25 percent.

Broke, sometimes hungry, a few became discouraged and turned back. Others, more hopeful, or lacking the funds ($300 per car and $100 per adult) required by U. S.-Canadian regulations for travelers on the Alcan highway set up "housekeeping" in the car-packed communities that mushroomed in the brush outside the city limits. Some who thought of selling their cars to raise passage home found the used car market had hit rock bottom. They joined the others.

One group of about 15 cars and 50 students, are "at home" on the banks of the Chena River back of the YMCA whose facilities they use for showering, laundering and letter-writing when they aren't looking for work.

Sleep Like Sardines

SEVERAL Rutgers students came to Alaska on the suggestion of a classmate who did "all right" last year. They have had a few jobs mowing lawns, painting the rest rooms of a church, washing windows, cutting up logs, digging cellars, hilling potatoes and working occasionally on the city garbage truck. They're paid on the average of $1.50 an hour with an occasional meal thrown in

Their panel trucks and station wagons are fitted with bunks in which three to five boys sleep like sardines. Seven students who appropriated an adjacent garage are living in comparative luxury.

A group from Miami, down to $18 among the three of them, have one meal a day of wheat cakes, at 40 cents the "cheapest food in town." They can't raise the money to get back, and haven't any jobs.

Labor here struck or walked off jobs in support of demands for $3 and $3.50 an hour. The students are willing to work for much less but they can't find any work to do.

City officials are watching the situation with concern. Fairbanks has no facilities for caring for the fundless, and if the boys cannot raise enough money to get back to the States in the fall, there may be a serious problem.

Cook Own Meals

THE group behind the YMCA cook their own meals because they have found food prices in Fairbanks prohibitive for their slender resources. Spaghetti and beans are getting a real workout. Milk at 50 cents a quart is cheaper than 20 cents a glass in the restaurants and a loaf of bread for 25 cents is a lot less than 35 cents for three slices of toast. Hamburgers are 60 cents, hot dogs 40 cents. Beer in the bars is 50 cents and 75 cents.

Gold panning has proved a lure to a few of the students who have struck out for Livengood about 75 miles from Fairbanks. A few of the boys have gone to work for the United States Smelting, Refining & Mining Co. at $1.23 an hour with special provisions for room and board.

Others do odd jobs like moving equipment, digging house foundations, and swamping at the hospital. One man got a surveying job at $2.62½ an hour and Paul Hulleburg of Lehigh, is greens manager and golf instructor at the Fairbanks Golf and Country Club.

One student worked out a parking ticket and made a few extra dollars painting the ceiling of the city manager. Another chap painted the picket fence and mowed the lawn of the Alaska highway patrol's head officer. City officials have been giving the boys any jobs they can scrape up.

"It's been rough going," said one of the college students. "But if the pioneers stuck it out, I guess we can too."

Benedict Students Divvy Up Tasks

East Lansing, Mich., July 29 (U.P.)—Slightly more than three-fourts of student newlywed couples divide up household tasks, a Michican State College survey among coed wives reveals.

Student husbands, however, shy away from baby-tending.

The research, carried out to find how married students solve problems of home and college life, revealed the student family attitude toward money, time, and energy.

Most newlywed students disclosed they determined how to spend money during informal talks and put more emphasis on planning ahead than on keeping elaborate records after money was spent.

Despite meager incomes, the study showed almost one half of the student families had savings and only 15 percent received help from parents or by borrowing money.

Almost all were making definite financial plans for the future either in regard to owning homes, having families, or continuing their education.

The survey showed that where both husband and wife attended classes, a majority divided housework chores. Only a few of the men students shared in baby-tending, however.

Brief News About Schools

New York University will offer a graduate workshop dealing with college work programs and cooperative work-study projects. Designed for college teachers and administrators, the three-week session which is to be held at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, from August 14 to September 1, will utilize Antioch's own successful development of work programs as part of the college curriculum. Field trips to near-by colleges and universities will be included in the program.

The University of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H., announced that 15 prominent writers, critics and editors will be on the staff of the university's thirteenth session of the writer's conference, to be held August 14 to 25. These experts will conduct classes and lead panel discussions on writing techniques and advise conference participants on their manuscripts. Last year more thon 100 novelists, poets, short-story writers and newspaper men attended the sessions. The conference is open both to professional and inexperienced writers.

The University of Minnesota, through its press, has published a book designed to aid high-school superintendents, teachers and guidance specialists in planning and carrying out student personnel services. "Guidance Procedures in High School," by C. Gilbert Wrenn and Willis E. Dugan, is a study based on a survey of such services in the nonmetropolitan high schools of Minnesota. The practices recommended are for use in small to average-sized high schools in a program geared to "grass roots" procedures.

Smith College, Northampton, Mass., reports that more than 800 of its undergraduates, or over one-third of the student body, are doing some kind of paid or volunteer summer work or study, according to the college's vocational office. The largest group of working students this year is employed in the general area of child care. The next highest percentage is working in department stores.

Michigan State College will conduct an economic workshop to discuss and investigate some of the Nation's most troublesome economic problems. One hundred educators, businessmen and economists will participate in the conference which will last until August 15.

Europe Busy With Fairs And Festivals

IN ADDITION to the many regular tourist attractions in Europe, travelers this summer and fall can plan to take in any number of colorful festivals, sporting events and fairs on "the other side," according to United Air Lines, whose daily flights from Washington connect with trans-Atlantic carriers at Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

In Austria, for example, the famed Salzburg Festival is scheduled from July 27-August 31. The "Passion Play" will be presented at Oberammargau during July and August.

September 5-14 are dates of the fifty-fifth international autumn trade fair at Utrecht, Holland; September 9 is Amsterdam's floral parade and September 19 will mark the opening of the Dutch Parliament by Queen Juliana.

Off-the-beaten-track holidays in Europe are growing in popularity, United's travel officials report. Many visitors to England, for instance, find they can best see the country by walking or cycling and staying at hostels overnight. In Holland visitors can view picturesque old towns and historic buildings from the decks of a floating hotel or on gondola trips through the Delft canals. "Drive Yourself" systems are available in most European countries for those who wish to see out-of-the-way spots of interest by car.

'One Man's Family' to Resume

TAOS, N. MEX., July 29.—Taos Indians are dancing by firelight in the plaza here each Monday and Friday evening of the summer. Spanish Colonial dances in gay costumes are seen every Wednesday night and square dances each Tuesday.

These are among features of the free community entertainment in this picturesque town just 70 miles north of Sante Fe.

The Indian dances are performed by residents of the strange Indian pueblo, or village, just one mile from the plaza which centers this town, long a favorite with artists and writers.

With a backdrop of high mountains, the Taos area comprises three distinct settlements, including the Indian village with its multi-story earthern "apartment" buildings. These unique structures were old when the first Spanish explorers arrived more than 400 years ago.

Nassau Stores Far Famed

NASSAU, BAHAMAS, July 29—Keeping pace with the important new role Nassau is playing in travel history are the stores which line historic Bay Street here.

Not so many years ago, visitors to this booming British resort-capital could walk around the town's shopping center in a matter of minutes. Today, it takes a leisurely morning's stroll to cover all the shops that run east and west for about a mile along Bay Street.

To the east of the old city lie stores specializing in straw work, shellcraft and marine curios, and the delicate combs, pins, necklaces and other jewelry made from true tortoise shell. West of the center of town are perfume stores, shops where the visitor can get Dunhill pipes, Cashmere sweaters, Harris tweeds, Shetland woollens, English doeskin, brocades and tapestries from the Orient, spices, satins and rare liqueurs.

It is this cosmopolitan collection of choice goods brought from every corner of the globe that has made Bay Street a name to be associated with some of the world's other great shopping centers, like Fifth Avenue, Bond, Regent and Oxford Streets.

American visitors are making substantial savings on British and European goods bought in Nassau. In some cases the saving is considerably more than the 30 percent which Americans make on currency exchange here.

Canadian Island Lures Tourists

CANADA'S smallest Province, Prince Edward Island, each year welcomes thousands of American tourists to its shore. It has an appeal to the summer vacationist second to no other and far beyond its size. To all those who have visited it, P. E. I. is commonly known as "The Garden of the Gulf" because of its scenic beauty and charm.

Prince Edward Island, served by the Canadian National Railways, is the birthplace of Canada and rich in historical background. It was this island, with its quaint fishing villages, which was chosen as the spot where 23 statesmen met in 1864 to weld together the scattered colonies of British North America into the present Dominion of Canada.

Whether it is to spend a quiet, lazy vacation and enjoy its unexcelled sea bathing off lovely natural sandy beaches or to turn one's hand to a more active life of golfing, tennis, sailing or some of the other activities, the island holds all the attractions one could desire for a vacation.

Perhaps one of its greatest attractions is Old Home Week, which is combined with the Provincial Exhibition and had its beginning in 1898. It now draws more than 50,000 persons from the United States and Canada each year. It will be held in Charlottetown, the provincial capital, August 14-18.

One feature of the event is night harness racing. Charlottetown has become known as "The Kentucky of Canada." But that is only one of dozens of other important features including exhibitions of handicraft, livestock and other farm products, vaudeville acts, midway, which thrill and interest its patrons.

Mountain Polo

Asheville, N. C.—Polo is an added attraction in western North Carolina's "Land of the Sky." The North Carolina team launched its 1950 season against the Augusta, Ga., Polo Club and has scheduled 24 games at Fletcher Field on Sundays and holidays. The first chukker begins at 3:30. Matches are already scheduled with the Ivory Polo Club of Detroit, St. Louis Polo Club, Los Rancheros Club of Havana, Aiken and Mulberry Plantation Clubs of South Carolina.

Half Million Yearly Visit Hot Springs National Park

A HALF MILLION people from every State in the Union and all parts of the world annually visit Hot Springs National Park, the first to be established in the United States, and the only national park surrounded by a city. Hot Springs is also distinctive in being the only national park which can boast of being a spa.

The city of Hot Springs lies deep in a valley formed by four mountains—Sugar Loaf, North West and Hot Springs—with its show place, magnolia bordered Bath House Row promenade and eight magnificent bathing palaces located at the west base of Hot Springs Mountain. Also at this base 47 hot springs pour forth steaming waters.

You can find just about everything in the spa from swank shops, luxury hotels, rustic lakeshore cabins, oriental auction centers and all types of eating, dine and dance spots, deluxe apartments, motor courts, guest houses, dude ranches, trailer parks and camp sites.

For golfers Hot Springs offers five sporty courses.

All 19 of Hot Springs' bathing establishments—the eight on Bath House Row and the nine located elsewhere in hospitals, hotels and the newest in a hotel-court—are run under Government supervision.

Gaspe Peninsula Abounds With Scenery

Farm scene on the Gaspe Peninsula

THE Gaspe Peninsula in the southeastern section of the Province of Quebec, lifts its cleft nose above the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Baie des Chaleurs like a settler sniffing the air.

Gaspe is a land that has no counterpart elsewhere on the continent. Its scenery remains unviolated. It is an area that the machine age seems to have skipped. Old French customs and older Norman traditions live on.

More than 400 years ago, Jacques Cartier took refuge in the deep bay on whose shore the village of Gaspe now stands. He landed and took possession in the name of the King of France. Today a granite cross commemorates his landing.

A summer schedule of combined rail and automobile tours around the Gaspe Peninsula has been arranged by the Canadian National Railways and the Gaspe Tours line at Mont Joli, Quebec. The tours will operate daily through August, while trips also will me made on September 1, 5, 9, 13 and 17.

Each tour consists of a trip via the C. N. R.'s "Ocean Limited" or "Scotian" to Mont Joli, where tourists transfer to a fleet of modern automobiles for a 550-mile four-day excursion. The automobiles take visitors over the entire coastline.

Highlights of the tour include the many fishing villages with their reminders of ancient Brittany, the renowned Perce Rock, and a boat trip to the famous bird sanctuary on Bonaventure Island.

'Liberte' Ready For Trial Run

The former German liner Europa, rechristened the Liberte, will be sailed from St. Nazaire by the French Line tomorrow on a three-day trial run which will end at Le Havre.

The 49,850-ton ship, awarded to France as a war reparation, is scheduled to make her initial departure for New York on August 17, arriving on August 23. Her capacity is 1513 passengers, 687 less than before her refitting. Herve Le Huede is her captain.

New Toll Roads Being Built

By Sherry Bowen

NEW YORK.—Is America going back to a toll road system she tried and dropped a century ago? The American Public Works Association reports nearly 300 miles of toll roads are in use in Connecticut, Maine, New York and Pennsylvania. Another 132 miles are being built in New Jersey and New Hampshire.

Other States have such projects in the talk stage. In most cases, modern toll roads would not have been built except for the idea that users would pay for them through tolls.

Much the same situation was found in America in 1795. One big difference is that private firms owned most of the early-day toll roads. Today, most are run by public agencies.

Origin of Turnpikes

IN 1795 the country was beginning to expand. New farms were being carved out of the wilderness. But there were few roads and those usually were bad. Farmers could not get their crops to market. Even very high taxes could not have built needed roads. And Americans did not like to pay taxes in 1795 any better than they do in 1950.

The toll road idea, tried in England, was brought to the United States. Private firms built what came to be called "turnpikes." Turnpikes were poles (pikes) placed across the roads to turn back travelers until they paid up.

One of the first turnpikes was chartered in 1785 in Virginia. One of the most famous was the Lancaster Pike from Philadelphia to Lancaster, Pa., opened in 1797. The great pike building era was from 1795 to 1810. One estimate is that the Northeastern States had 170 active turnpike firms in 1810 with five million dollars invested in 3000 miles of road.

Then Bubble Burst

MANY more were chartered. Another estimate is that by 1811 New York State alone chartered 137 firms which planned 4500 miles of road at a cost of $7,500,000.

Then the firms began to go broke. By 1825 stocks in most companies were worthless. Traffic had been spread out until it was too light to pay what was expected. It cost to collect tolls. It cost more to maintain the roads. Then, after 1830, the railroads began to take much of the freight. That was a death blow.

But many turnpikes remained until 1850 and some long after that date. And about 1845 there was a new movement, known as the plank road era. But all the new roads were not built of planks. There were roads built out from a market center to serve farms. The turnpikes were longer.

Tolls Were High

TOLLS on the turnpikes were relatively high. On the famous Genesee road in New York, for instance, the toll gates were 10 miles apart. At each a horse and carriage or two horses and a wagon paid 12½ cents. On other roads rates were often 1½ cents per mile for a vehicle and two animals.

In one other way, the old turnpike movement was like the modern toll road program. There were toll bridges before there were toll roads. As early as 1704, there are records of toll bridges between New York and Boston.

Americans discovered in their first round of toll roads that they did not like to pay tolls any better than they liked to pay taxes. Early court records are filled with suits by turnpike companies to force payments. People were always building roads that fed into the turnpike on either side of toll gates. Tax roads often were built along the same route. In some instances the tax roads were better than the toll roads.

N. C. Highway Dedication Is Postponed

BLOWING ROCK, N. C. (AP)—Formal dedication of the Blue Ridge parkway scheduled for August 12 has been postponed until June, 1951.

The action was taken by the Blue Ridge Parkway Associated Chambers of Commerce today because of the international situation which will prevent the attendance of President Truman this year.

The motion to postpone was made by vice president Ben Moomaw of Roanoke, Va., and seconded by Stafley Harris of Boone, N. C., a director of the association.

Sam P. Weems, superintendent of the parkway, announced that the new links of the parkway opening it for traffic between the James River north of Roanoke, Va., and Asheville, N. C., would be completed by August 12, as scheduled.

The dedication ceremonies are now set for June 9, 1951, on the parkway at the Virginia-North Carolina line.

Asheville Prepares For Folk Festival

Asheville, N. C.—Western North Carolina mountain folk are busy rehearsing for the 23rd annual Mountain Dance and Folk Festival to be held here August 3, 4, and 5. More than 600 participants are expected.

The event will start "along about sundown" and has no formal program. Square dance teams will hold elimination contests on the first two nights. Winning contestants will compete for the championship cup on the final night. Sandwiched between dance numbers, ballad singers, mountain bands, and fiddle and guitar players will make mountain music.

JACK LORD: he whistled like a canary

The Turning Point

JACK LORD is glad he can whistle like a bird. If he couldn't, he wouldn't be in the movies today.

It all began when Jack was bent over a drawing board, preparing some booklets for the Navy during the war. An artist, he enjoyed his assignment and whistled while he painted. A stranger walked into the room and hearing the whistle, said, "Who gave that guy the canary seed?"

Jack looked up and gave the commentator a glare which he hoped was worthy of the indignation he felt.

Two days later the stranger was back. "If the rest of your acting can match that dirty look you gave me the other day," he said, "we can use you in some training films."

Acting Came Easy

Lord turned out to be such a competent actor that he was quickly ordered to put aside his brushes to make training films. After the war, he went into television. From there, he got a leading role in a fast-moving film called "Project X," followed shortly by another lead in "Cry Murder" (Eagle Lion Classics). Jack played a "heavy" in both pictures and the critics liked him. Today, the New York-born actor is in Italy making his third film.

Lord might have excelled in two other fields: at New York University he was one of the best tackles the varsity ever had, turned down many pro football offers. His powerful art work has been widely exhibited, and two of his prints are in the permanent collection at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

"But I'm glad I could whistle loud," says Jack. "That's what really started me out. That—and a lucky break!"

"SIAMESE SUE" (above) is the pride and joy of the Fish and Wildlife Service Aquarium in Washington, D. C.

This tiny two-headed turtle, hatched in a Louisiana pet shop about a year ago, is about the size of a silver dollar, and is probably the only one (or two) of its kind in the U. S.

Actually, Sue is two turtles under one shell. She has two of everything, but only four legs, one tail. The right head controls the right legs; the left, those on the left side.

Siamese turtles are rare, live briefly. If Sue grows to full size (five or six years), she will be about as big as a soup plate and will probably sign a fat television contract.

"Be kind to

An authority advises parents to try a little friendliness on their own and neighbors' kids

BRAD TEETER grabbed the clothespole and swung himself to the top of the backyard fence. From it he hurtled through the air in a graceful arc that terminated in a neighbor's garden. For a golden moment he was Tarzan of the Apes.

The neighbor, who prized his lettuce above the children down the street, came running from his back porch, sputtering. "Tarzan" was in for it.

To Brad Teeter, a friendly, uninhibited and well-adjusted nine-year-old resident of Long Beach, Calif., this man's wrath was something new. But thousands of other American children are familiar with his tongue. For he is a symbol of the child-hating adult known to parents, teachers, psychologists and sociologists all over the U.S.

Every neighborhood has its active child-haters, according to Dr. Howard A. Lane, head of child development at New York University's School of Education. Traffic horns may not annoy them, but they will call the police department to break up a children's baseball game on the street.

But what is this? Haven't we Americans always been kind to our children? Look at the time and money we spend feeding, clothing and educating them—and providing them with ample recreational facilities which are second to none in the world.

True, says Dr. Lane, yet many of us are inclined to deny an even more important contribution to our children's future—our friendship!

"What we really need," he believes, "is an annual 'Be Kind to Children Week.'"

"Mental hygienists say that people have to have friends," says Dr. Lane. "Well, children are people, too, and, like other people, are known by the company they keep. In my own experience I have never met a so-called delinquent child who had a single decent adult friend."

How can children and adults become friends?

Only when adults readjust their point of view when looking at children, says Dr. Lane. Finding fault in children is almost the principal activity of too many parents and teachers, he believes. What we need to substitute is a more enlightened view—"close, neighborly interest in all children."

How can that be done?

▸ First, adults should make a point to stop and talk to children—any children—during "Be Kind to Children Week." Try this, Dr. Lane urges, and you may be surprised at how much you will learn.

Youngsters Are Worth Consulting

▸ Second, parents should ask their children's opinions on matters involving them. "You can learn a great deal from a child," Dr. Lane believes. "Taking a youngster bike-riding or fishing is far more valuable than buying him a bicycle."

▸ Third, invite neighborhood kids into your home. It's important, Dr. Lane feels, to make your neighbor's youngster feel that he is a part of your family, too. This will show him that you like him as a person and as your child's friend. It will also give you an audience interested in what you have to say.

If you want to be a child's real friend, you have to look out for his welfare. Provide a safe and adequate space for him to play in. Don't just box him into a playground. Allow him freedom.

"Let him shop for himself," Dr. Lane urges. "If he can pick out his own clothes, he'll feel more like a responsible person. Let him go where he wants to go, pick his own friends. And when he wants privacy—let him have privacy."

Don't Spank—Teach

DR. LANE takes a somber view of punishment. Don't use discipline as reprisal, he warns. Discipline should be teaching. It's valuable, he says, only if it works when you are not around.

Where there is no love or kindness in the home, he warns, there is danger.

"Let me tell you of Butch," he said recently. "His parents, brothers, neighbors, teachers all worked systematically to make him a delinquent. His father worked in a blind-alley job. His mother was old and ill before her time and both parents believed in beating their children.

"His older brothers passed on to Butch the cruelties they suffered.

"Today Butch is 15. He is in the sixth grade. His teachers have constantly found fault with him. The neighbors forbid their children to play with him. And soon he will be large and angry enough to do real harm. Then the neighbors will blame him because he learned so well the lessons he was taught."

Should we observe an annual "Be Kind to Children Week?" "Yes," says Dr. Lane, "but, more important, let's remember to be kind to children—both ours and our neighbors'—every week in the year."

Nearby lumberman also takes friendly interest in Brad.

His folks reciprocate by asking neighbor's son to dinner.

What a boy thinks of grown-ups:

● What does a youngster really think about his parents—and grown-ups generally? PARADE asked talkative, smiling Brad Teeter, 9, got these answers:

THEY WORRY TOO MUCH . . . "Now most of the time my folks are all right, but some of the other kids, why their parents seem to all the time worry, worry, worry all day long. Now why are they always yelling at us for climbing fences? We'll be all right."

THEY JUMP TO 'CLUSIONS . . . "As I said, my parents are fair with me most of the time, but it seems that any time anything goes wrong around here I'm to blame. Now I don't mind it when I really did do something wrong, but people have no right to say I did it until they've got the goods on me. That's what bothers me."

THEY'RE A LITTLE TOO BOSSY . . . "When I'm ordered around too much I get scared or dumb. This happens to my friends also."

THEY DON'T LAUGH ENOUGH . . . "Sometimes you get the idea grown-ups are laughing at you all right, but only because they're making fun of you. Most of the time they don't seem to laugh at the things kids want to laugh at."

THEY DON'T TALK TO US . . . "I notice that some parents seem afraid to talk to their kids. Now maybe they don't know what to talk about with kids, but it seems to me that you can talk to a kid about almost anything. Some kids aren't as dumb as you think."

BUT, THEY'RE ALL RIGHT . . . "Most grown-ups are pretty good. I get along fine with almost all of them in our neighborhood."

Here's how jet passenger planes may cut your flying time.

By EDWARD J. NICKEL & WILLIAM FRIEDMAN

IMAGINE this for a moment: yourself climbing into a deep-bellied commercial airliner in New York at seven o'clock one evening. Then you again step off the same plane in San Francisco just five and one-half hours later.

At times you flew at 40,000 feet, but the cabin was comfortably warm. New York was sweltering in a heat wave. In San Francisco the night was chilly. But the temperature in the plane hovered around 70 degrees for the entire flight.

There was no roar of motors. The only noise you heard was the conversation of fellow passengers. Even this died away when the stewardess turned up music on the plane's phono-amplifier.

Just over Denver, the pilot came back into the passenger cabin. He told you that you'd arrive right on time. While he was talking he took a nickel out of his pocket and balanced it on end on a table top. The sight of that nickel served as a reminder: you hadn't felt any vibration since you took off!

Turboprop engines are tested on Convair.

Across the Atlantic in Seven Hours

Still an imaginary flight? Of course, but in five years, maybe sooner, it needn't be. It will be real. You see, you have been flying in a commercial jet transport.

Visionary? Not at all. Listen to what Joseph J. O'Connell, Jr., Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board has to say about the future of jet transports:

"Within five years," declares the CAB head, "we will see the introduction of jet passenger transportation in the United States."

Why jets? What's the matter with our present, conventional-type planes?

The answer is mostly speed—and comfort.

Jet transports will fly at 500 miles an hour, compared to today's 300 or less. They'll cut the flying time from New York to London from 12 hours to seven, from New York to Bermuda from three hours plus to two hours and 12 minutes.

The lack of vibration you noticed on that imaginary flight is characteristic of jet performance. And a jet at high speed streaks along so fast that noise is left almost completely behind.

Up to now you've probably associated the "swoo-oosh" of airborne jets only with warplanes. But prototype passenger jets are already flying.

One of the top examples is England's De Havilland Comet (above) a four-jet, 48-passenger transport already in production. Another is Canada's Avro Jetliner, which made an experimental flight from Montreal to New York in 59 minutes. The present scheduled airline time for the same flight is an hour and 45 minutes.

Strangely, it is the U.S. aviation industry that has lagged in developing passenger jets.

U.S. plans are still on the drawing boards. And a squabble over finances is keeping them there. Our plane builders claim that they can't afford the $25 million it would cost to build a single passenger prototype. So do the airlines.

Who Will Pay for the First Ones?

Efforts to secure government financing have bogged down amid industry conflicts over the form it should take. The best bet is that some arrangement will be worked out to develop transport designs along lines of some of our jet bombers like the B-47.

Meanwhile, U.S. plane builders have been moving ahead more rapidly in the development of a more moderate jet version – the turboprop. Put simply, a turboprop engine is a turbojet engine geared to a propeller. It has many of the advantages of the propellerless jet, including the Projected Boeing transports look like Air Force B-47.

They'll be faster and quieter—and they may be flying on our airlines within the next five years same absence of vibration and noise. It isn't quite as fast.

Because the turboprop can be fitted to conventional plane designs—which the propellerless jet cannot—turboprop transports will enter airline service sooner, will bridge the gap between propellered and propellerless passenger flight.

Work is already being rushed to modify conventional transports like the Convair (bottom, left) and the Martin 2-0-2 for installation of turboprop engines. It may be only a matter of two years, some authorities believe, before turboprops will be carrying passengers.

That "imaginary" flight in a commercial jet transport is a good deal closer than you think!

Canada's Avro Jetliner is built to carry 50 persons.

Between parades, Wichita boosters rest at mountain cabin near Colorado Springs.

STREET meeting in Ellis, Kans. (pop. 2,500) follows parade from depot. Trippers marched four to eight miles daily.

BY DICK LONG

Booster badge: giant sunflower, Kansas emblem.

"We're from Wichita!"

The nation's oldest booster trek parades 1,300 miles across two states

IN A CONTEST for civic spirit among U.S. cities, the prize would probably go to six-score strong-lunged, jaunty businessmen from Wichita, Kans.

They're proud of their town—and they're glad to be called boosters. More than that, 125 of them were willing to shell out $170 apiece recently for a 1,300-mile jaunt through Kansas and Colorado. Its only purpose: to talk up Wichita among its neighboring communities.

Wearing flashy, broad-brimmed hats with "Wichita" spelled out on the bands, sporting plate-sized sunflower badges, and carrying jaunty canes, the goodwill trippers called at 38 towns. Visits lasted ten minutes to an hour, with one full-day stop in Colorado Springs. At every halt, Wichita's boosters piled off the train, paraded a mile or more down Main Street, met the mayor and talked to local people.

To adults, the Wichita crowd handed literature telling what a fine town Wichita is. They won the kids over by passing out bubble gum, pencils, rulers and noisemakers. Just to make sure there would be plenty of decibels, the visitors gave away 10,000 copper bells inscribed, "Ring for Wichita."

Sponsored by the Wichita Chamber of Commerce, the annual goodwill tour is a local institution. Wichita started them in 1872, when the railroad first reached the two-year-old community, has probably sponsored more than any other U.S. city.

They Plug for the Old Home Town

Wherever they went, Wichita's ambassadors talked about the weather, crops and business—but mostly they talked about Wichita.

In 1906, the first year the tour was formally organized, the boosters talked of Wichita's population of 40,252; this year, they could claim 186,000. In 1906, they bragged of nine miles of paving; this year, there are 350 miles to talk about. In 1906, they boasted of 55 miles of water mains; this year 720 miles.

The only thing about Wichita, boosters cheerfully admit, that hasn't got bigger and better with the years is the elevation. It's still just exactly 1,300 feet above sea level.

"THE GANG": On stretch of Kansas prairie between two towns, train halted for group picture.

RIVER WILD MEN!

You've got to be lucky,

this mad chase through

BY TOM MATHEWS

SHE'S A WILD BABY, that Wind River.

She feeds on the sky-cracking range, 80 miles southwest of Thermopolis, Wyo., and when the sun gets at the snowfields in the spring, she bucks through her canyons like a crazy mustang.

But they ride her—they ride the Wind. It happens every year in the annual White Water Race sponsored by sports-loving townspeople of Thermopolis (pop. 2,500). A handful of wild men tumble down the river's frigid, boulder-fanged gorge for excitement, glory, and a chance at $1,000. Their ride through one of the wildest stretches of white water in the West makes the Pendleton Roundup or the Calgary Stampede look like a canter on a village merry-go-round.

Only a few of the contestants are river men. Most of them are mechanics, cowboys, pick and shovel men, oil-field roustabouts, construction workers and clerks—all with plenty of courage and a large scorn for personal comfort.

Just Jump Right In

The rules are simple. Technically, you don't even need a boat. Contestants may just jump into the river, hang onto a life preserver and roll down the 12-mile course in which the river drops over 1,000 feet. But if you do use a boat, any old kind will do.

Canoes, folboats, rubber rafts, outriggers, surfboats, airplane belly tanks, railroad ties, inner tubes and anything else that floats can and have been entered.

This summer marked the third running of this wild man's river rodeo. Sixteen entrants paid $25 apiece just to show up at the starting line. And when the gun fired, 14 shoved off.

Only half of these finished. The rest were strung along the course, water-logged and exhausted, their boats punctured or lost.

The winning entry was a decked canoe ridden, clutched and sometimes chased by Aubrey Lynch and Arnold Blanton, a couple of upriver reclamation workers.

Winners Had to Swim

Blanton knew something about canoeing but Lynch absolutely nothing. This didn't stop them from winning the $1,000 purse. They zipped down the river forwards, backwards, sideways, right side up and upside down and some of the time the canoe was knifing downstream with both men swimming furiously after it. Their time: an hour and 38 minutes.

Second place (worth $283) went to a cataract boat, the only really river-worthy craft in the race. Third prize ($141) was won by a monstrous contraption of boards and empty grease cans.

The most disappointed man in the race was Johnny Wells, last year's winner, who broke two paddles and turned over six times in four miles. He had to quit.

Although there has never been a drowning in the race, the river almost claimed two of the contestants in 1949. Paralyzed by cold and fatigue, they swamped and were rescued from the raging river by two schoolboys who lassoed them from the shore.

It's Pure Ice Water

Entrants agree that the stream has "Wyoming winter" in it and that the snows that feed it have melted only enough to flow. They talk solemnly about the fisherman who fell in and didn't come up until he thawed out at Natchez.

Despite the river's "Wyoming winter," its crashing current and its rocked-toothed rapids, the future of its annual wild man's race seems assured. All it needs is men wild enough to run it.

One of these is Bob Cole, a 61-year-old Thermopolis blacksmith, who entered this year's race in the converted P-38 belly tank used last year by Johnny Wells. The oldest man in the race, Cole held on all the way although he careened from the boulders into the waves all the way down. At the finish, blue with cold, he climbed painfully from his boat, staggered to the coffee canteen, downed a steaming mug and shook his head.

"Sometimes," he said, "I wonder if I'm ever really gonna grow up."

1950's Carmen: 19-year-old Anita Rodriguez of Seville, Spain. She dances the flamenco.

A photographer reports . . .

Seville still has a Carmen!

PHOTOGRAPHER Roger Coster has specialized in snapping glamor girls in Europe, South America, and the U.S. Here is his report of a trip to Spain to find whether "Carmen" exists in 1950.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO, a Frenchman named Prosper Merimee wrote the story of a fiery Spanish girl named Carmen, a famous glamor girl.

She works in a cigarette factory in Seville, but after work she goes out with bull-fighters, sings, and dances on the table. She has black eyes, black hair, lively!

Later on, another Frenchman named Georges Bizet wrote an opera about her. Since then, she has been the glamor girl of opera and a symbol of Spain. What better that I, another Frenchman, should go to Spain to look for a real-life Carmen of 1950?

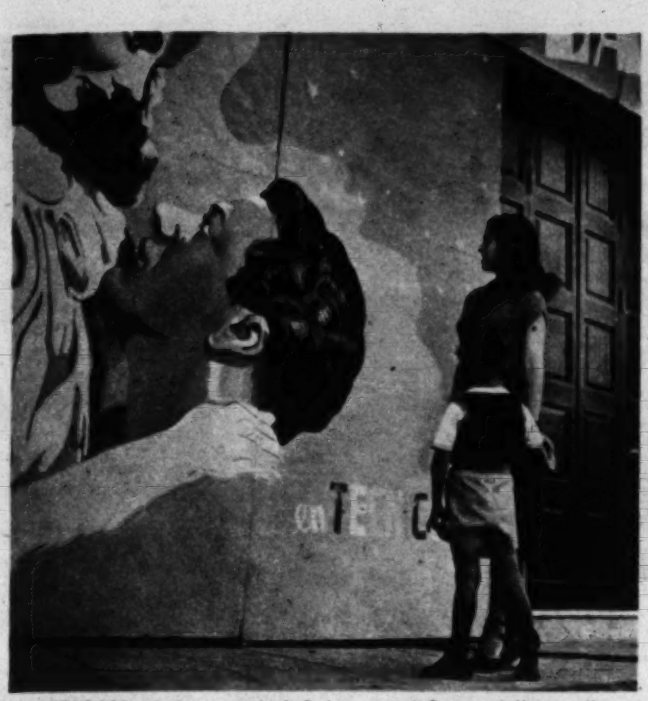
As soon as I arrived in Seville, I checked my luggage at the hotel and went to a cigarette factory. To the director of the cigarette factory (he was smoking a cigar) I asked, "Where is Carmen?"

"But Senor," he replied, "you are one of the thousands who come to look for Carmen. I tell them always, Carmen NEVER worked here! Years and years ago, 2,000 women worked here. Now we have only 350 left. The youngest is 65. She is no Carmen."

This was the end of a dream. I had come all the way from New York, and no Carmens. Where would I look?

Just behind the Alcazar is the Spanish Tourist Bureau.

"CARMEN" eats in mother's kitchen with rest of family. Father (left) is a mechanic. Family has no gas, bathtub, electricity.



AMERICAN movies, not bull-fights, are "Carmen's" pet diversion. She takes brother. Piano-player "steady" doesn't like them.

I found there a nice gentleman with white hair and a small mustache. Very "caballero." "Sir," I said, "I'm looking for Carmen. I'm sure there is a Carmen someplace. I must meet her: black eyes, black hair, lively!"

"Senor," he replied, "I am 68 years old. I was born and raised in Seville. Carmen is a foreigner's dream. In my youth, I used to search, too. Go see my friend Senor Laffita. He is a newspaperman. He may know."

"Look in a Nightclub"

Senor Laffita was kind to me. He published an article in his newspaper on page 3 asking his readers, "Where is Carmen? What would she be doing?" The answers came: "Carmen could dance. Look in a nightclub."

There was only one man for me to contact, a Senor Realito, a dancing teacher. He taught the famous dancing team of Rosario & Antonio and Carmen Amaya, who went to the U.S. "Senor," he swore, "I know every girl in Seville. If there is a Carmen, we will find her!"

We went to the "Casino." The Senor drank a bottle of wine. We went to the "Citroen." Another bottle. We went to "La Botega." There was a girl in the chorus. I said, "Carmen!" I got my camera. Here is Carmen, 1950.

AT NIGHT, exhausted from dancing, she goes home to bed and dreams about Hollywood. As dancer, she makes $5 per evening.

VACATION "VITTLES" FOR BABY. You can buy Gerber's Strained and Junior Foods almost everywhere you go these days, but to avoid getting caught short one of our readers makes this foresighted suggestion: "Take along several containers of each of the Gerber's Fruits, Vegetables, Meats and Desserts Baby likes so much."

SEE WHAT UNCLE SAM SAYS. A recent bulletin from the U. S. Department of Agriculture offers this bright idea on bringing up Baby. To keep your tot quietly amused on a sizzling day, tie a bright balloon to the crib, carriage or playpen. Watching it move seems to fascinate small folks in a big way. Keeps them cool, quiet and happy for quite a stretch.

MIDSUMMER GIFT. Send for your free samples of Gerber's Cereal Food, Strained Oatmeal and Barley Cereal. So smooth, so pleasant-tasting—and all ready-to-serve. Write to Dept. 647-0, Fremont, Michigan.

Saving that smile till lunchtime?

Lunchtime means meat! And even tiny tots break into big grins when meat's on the menu—particularly Gerber's Meats. For each can of Beef, Veal or Liver has all the all-meat goodness of Armour quality cuts—specially prepared for babies, of course. That means true-meat color, true-meat flavor—plus complete body-building proteins. Your baby needs them every day.

You save every day—as much as 55 minutes and lots of Daddy's hard-earned money when you serve Gerber's Beef, for instance, rather than fixing Baby's meat at home. No tedious scraping! All Gerber's Meats are ready-to-eat. It's as easy to serve them as Gerber's True-Flavor Fruits, Vegetables and Desserts.

More smiles per spoonful when Baby's on Gerber's—right from the first: For the Cereals, Strained Foods, Junior Foods and Meats are prepared by specialists who spend all their time on baby foods. They know babies' texture, taste and nutritional needs from infancy through toddlerhood. That's why doctors approve Gerber's, too—start to finish.

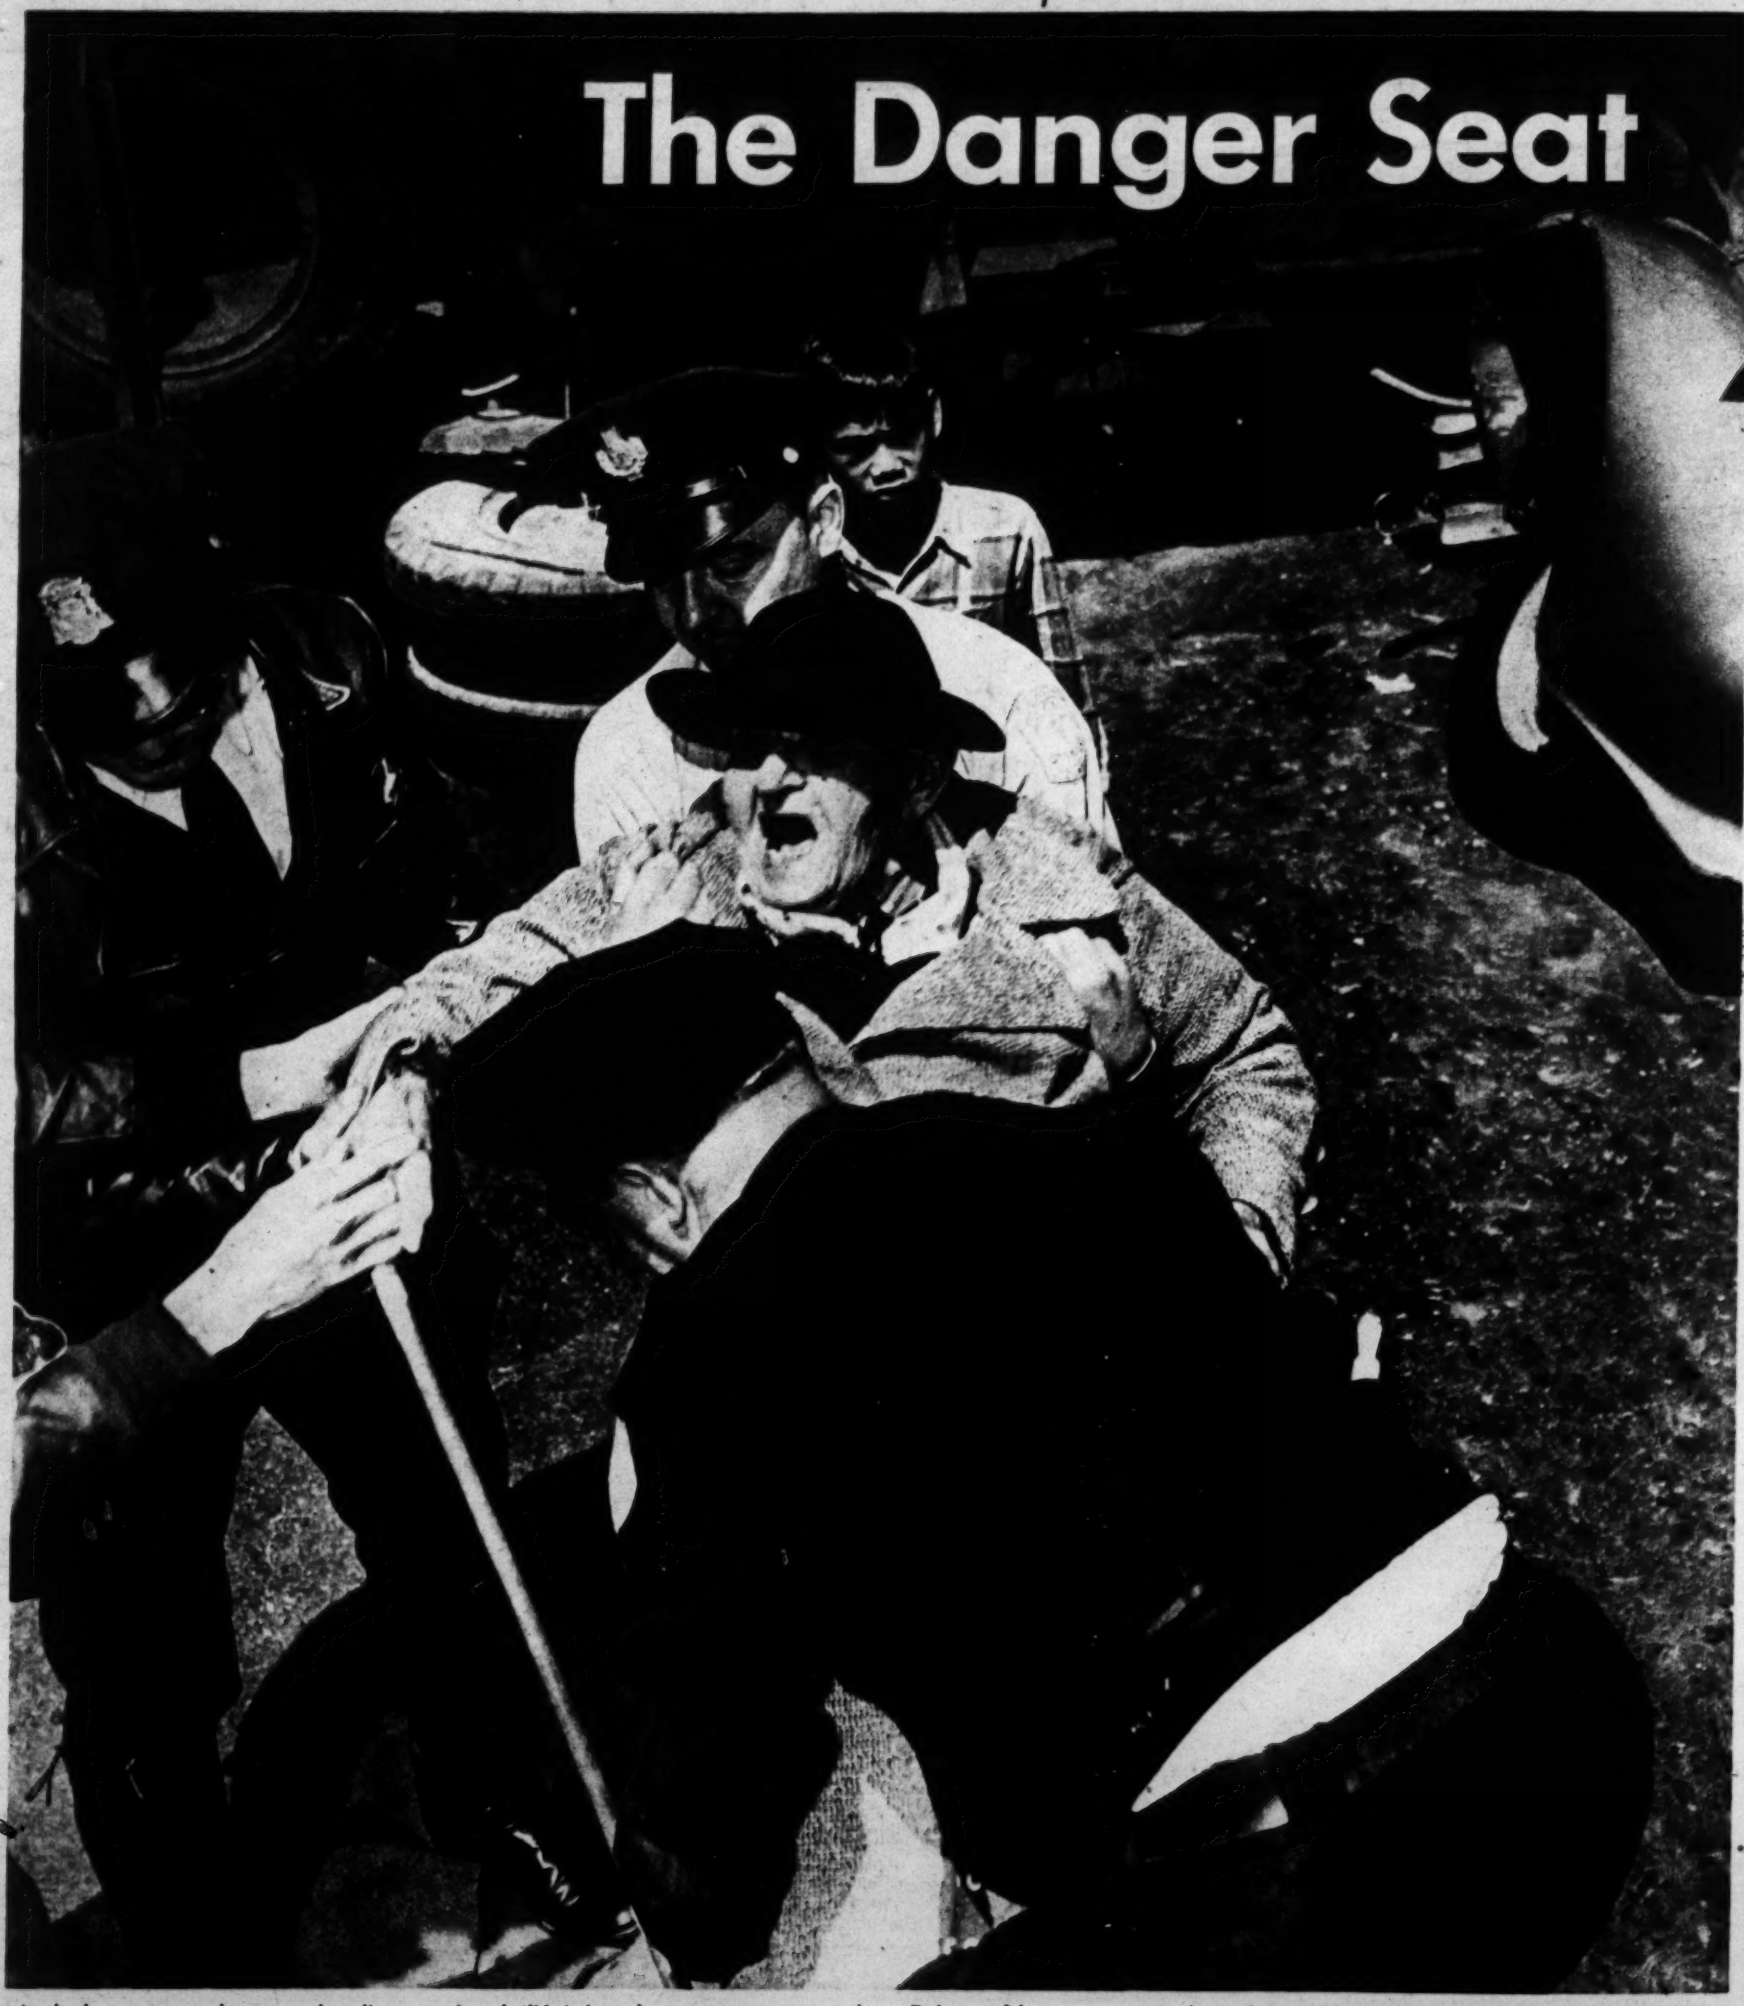
The Danger Seat



Ambulance attendants and police cautiously lift injured woman onto stretcher. Driver of her car was unhurt, but she was in "danger seat" next to him.

In accidents, it's not the driver who gets hurt — more often, it's the person beside him

By FRANK H. RICHARDSON, M.D.

IT REALLY WASN'T much of an accident. A front tire blew and the car left the road and stopped short in a ditch.

The driver was thrown forward in his seat. But the steering wheel pushed him back. He wasn't even scratched.

His wife, seated next to him, was not so fortunate. Catapulted forward, she cracked her head on the instrument panel. The police found her dead of a skull fracture: another victim of the "danger seat!"

Actually, that right-hand front seat, says Dr. Claire L. Straith, Detroit plastic surgeon, is the "death seat." The person who sits there—girl friend, mother with baby, hitchhiker or office companion—has three or four chances of suffering injury or death to the driver's one chance.

Here's why: the driver has the steering wheel to protect him from hitting the windshield or dashboard. At the very least it will lessen the force with which he strikes if he does reach them.

Nothing Shields the Passenger

But his passenger has nothing to keep head, neck or face from smashing into and through the windshield, from crashing against some of the knobs on the dash, or being slashed by the cutting edge of the glove pocket or the ash receiver.

Let's be specific. Dr. Straith reports that of fifty consecutive patients he treated for injuries to the face, eight were in the driver's seat, eight in the back seat, but 34 were in the danger seat beside the driver. And of these, 25 were women.

Here's more proof: in a study of accidents for September, 1947, carried out by the Accident Prevention Bureau of the Detroit Police Department, it was found that in 219 accidents where more than one rider was injured, 260 passengers were hurt, but no drivers. The accidents in which the drivers were injured but the passengers were unhurt were a mere 13.

How do these injuries occur?

If the head strikes the windshield and breaks it, head and neck wounds come from the impact and from glass slivers.

If the head is deflected to the dash after striking the windshield, cuts and crushing injuries to the face are inflicted.

If the face strikes the dash without hitting the windshield first, it is likely either to be crushed by the force of the impact, or torn and cut by the knobs and sharp edges on the right side of the dash.

Don't Let This Happen to You!

The wounds the guest passenger suffers don't make pleasant reading. They may be deep cuts or severe lacerations.

But here's good news: some manufacturers are re-arranging their car interiors so as to lessen these hazards. One well-known make has removed all attachments from the right to the left-hand side of the dash except for half the radio panel. This is covered by a smooth metal plate. An even more valuable safety device is a canvas web belt that can be buckled round the passenger's waist much like an airliner seat belt.

A Pad for the Dash

Another manufacturer has also cleared the right-hand dash on all his models; but on one model has added an additional safety device. This is a "crash pad" of sponge rubber the size and thickness of a man's arm. It's placed around the outside of the right-hand half of the dash.

It's easy enough to talk about preventing this sort of thing from happening in the first place. Safer driving is the only real cure. But until we eliminate traffic accidents entirely – and there's little prospect of this yet—we can at least observe a number of simple rules in driving with others. Check them below:

Protect yourself in the "danger seat"...

● 1. See to it that no child rides in the lap of the person who occupies the right-hand front seat, nor is permitted to stand on the floor by the dashboard.

● 2. If this seems unavoidable, be sure that some sort of restraining strap is employed that will halt him short of the windshield in case of a sudden stop.

● 3. Improvise a "crash pad" from a sheet of airfoam rubber, the porous, light, flexible, yielding substance used to pad car seats. It may be bought from any accessories dealer. Hang this over the right half of the dash so that it can be pushed aside or up, to give access to any attachments it covers.

● 4. If in an emergency you suddenly realize there is going to be a crash, brace yourself as well as you can. Then, if you're sitting in the "danger seat," lean forward and cushion the top of your head and face by folding both arms against the dashboard.

Will observing all these measures make the danger seat a safe place to ride in? Not at all.

But a faithful carrying out of these simple rules will greatly reduce the hazards that will probably always attend riding in this least favored spot in the car.

"Here I am again, Hank"

Here's a smart gal! She buys gas and oil for her car the same way she buys cosmetics—by brand name. Naturally, she patronizes only the dealer who carries the brand name she prefers. She knows that buying by brand name is the only way to get the exact product she prefers.

Brand names offer you protection! By knowing brand names, you make the manufacturer responsible for the products that bear his name. Any manufacturer knows that if you find his products good, you will buy them. If not, you won't—and the manufacturer will be forced out of business.

Brand names assure you of better and better products to choose from. Manufacturers compete to improve their products—to give you more for less money.

Remember—you get protection, quality, better value—and exactly what you want, when you buy by brand names. You'll find the ads in this magazine a big help. They include some of America's most famous brand names.

Lucky Cats

Four-figure legacies from fond owners keep pets rolling in catnip

THERE WAS a lot of legal brow-wrinkling in Providence, R. I., recently. And all because of three cats.

They had all been living – in considerable style–in a 16-room mansion, as provided in the will of their late owner, a wealthy widow.

But other heirs decided to lease the mansion. That meant the cats had to go. Moreover, human heirs objected to a provision of the will which gave the widow's maid $5,000 and $10 a week to take care of the cats.

In probate court, judge and counsel pondered the matter.

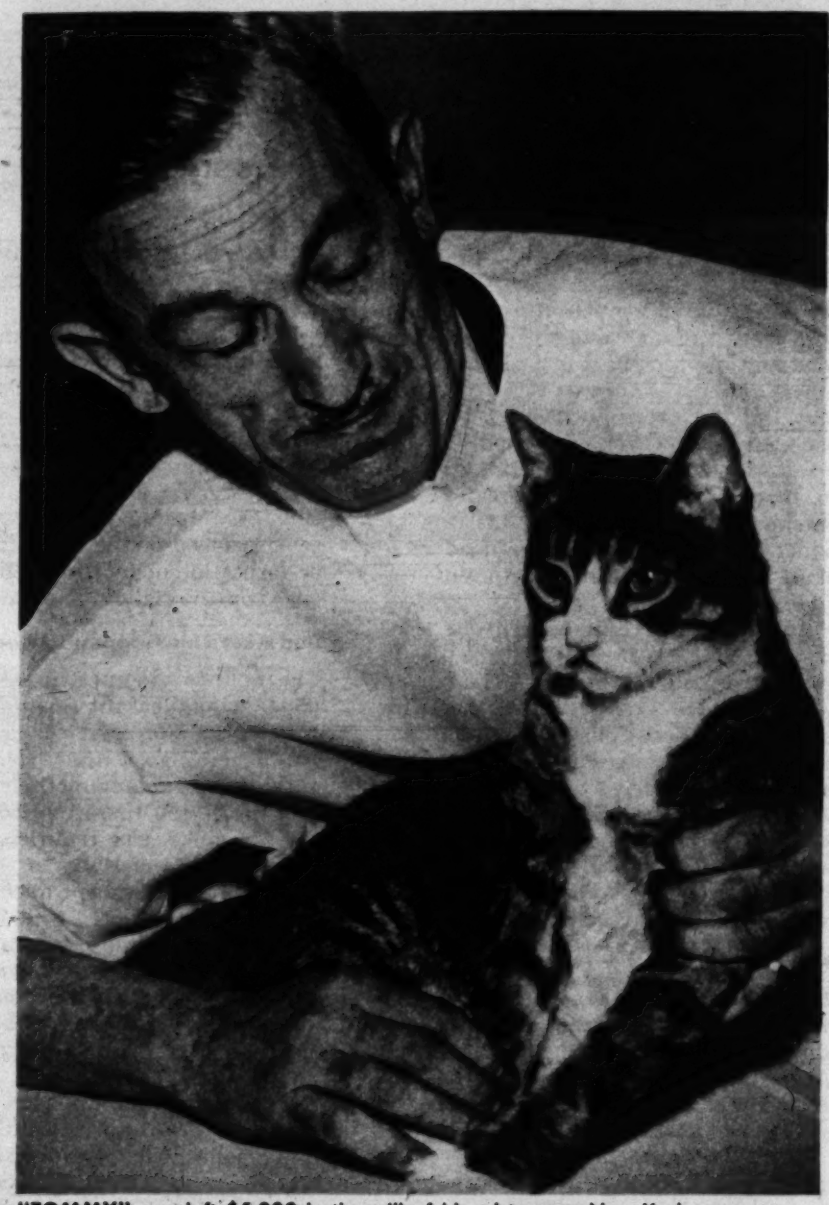
Court's decision: the maid was to receive $4,000 outright, but no $10-a-week fee. The maid, for her part, agreed to care for the cats in her own home for life.

Lucky cats like these in Providence aren't uncommon in the U.S. Every year, a dozen or so are elevated to the inherited thick cream-and-catnip class. Some examples:

The wealthy owner of an 18-year-old Persian puss named "Mitzi" willed her not only a mansion, but $15,000 besides. And a retired Navy captain in Washington, D. C., left $20,000 for the care of 14 pedigreed mousers.

Cats in the Cream

In Oxford, Pa., a woman willed $5,000 to the Chester County Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The money was to be used for her tabby, "Girlie." And in New York City, a veterinarian was made trustee of a $5,000 fund by a woman who wanted to be sure that her cat, "Tommy," would live in full feline comfort.



"TOMMY" was left $5,000 in the will of his mistress, a New York woman. Holding him is Veterinarian H. L. Hirscher, appointed trustee of cat fund.

LEGACY: California owner willed this home and $15,000 to 18-year-old cat.

HEIRESS: "Girlie," cat in Philadelphia, Pa., was willed $5,000.

Actually, cats that suddenly fall heir to money get just as much attention from the courts as human legatees do. A number of odd legal problems are usually involved.

Under the English common law, for example, a cat was not considered property. It had no value, since it could not be eaten. But now the owner is liable for injuries inflicted by such animals, and this means that the animals are legal property.

As property, however, a cat can't be bequeathed property under the law.

The Law of Cats

Discussing "cat law," Milton L. Fisher, New York attorney and university law instructor, says that you should set up an annuity if you're going to make provision in your will for a pet. He adds:

"A legacy or trust fund can only go to a specific animal – or animals directly. In other words, you can't leave your money to your cat's future kittens."

He has further advice for pet-lovers anxious to protect the declining days of Puss. Samples:

Puss Needs a Trustee

- Find a reasonable trustee and an alternate for your pet.
- Under existing law, should the second trustee also die, the money must go to a person, or to charity.
- Your cat can be supported either by interest on the fund or by a stated amount each year.
- The final beneficiary, when the cat dies, must be a human being or a bona fide corporation.
- Legally, that beneficiary can demand a yearly accounting of the funds devoted to the cat.

Fisher recalls the complaint of an heir who once disputed a whopping bill for a mink coat a trustee bought for a cat.

Fisher's rejoinder: "Certainly a cat with $10,000 in the bank is able to afford a mink coat!"

HOLLYWOOD, ever questing, has made a discovery.

Having long and expertly exploited the female bosom, it has found the next-best thing: the bare male chest.

Photographers accustomed to training their cameras on full-busted beauties are now assigned by movie studios to shoot pictures of males in undress. The result is what Hollywood calls "beefcake." (The feminine version, as everybody knows, is "cheesecake.")

Hollywood's sudden interest in the well-flexed chest muscle goes back to ground-work performed by the industry's eager press agents.

In surveys that may change the cultural pattern of the country, they uncovered this simple fact: women moviegoers place an actor's physique before his acting ability. The result: current movies are full of shirtless males.

What's more, no would-be male star these days can be launched without posing in the half-buff. Sooner or later he rips off his shirt, flexes his biceps, and becomes "beefcake."

(Actually, beefcake is older than cheesecake. Long before Betty Grable displayed her legs, he-men like William Farnum in "The Spoilers" (1919) were displaying their muscles in celluloid brawls.)

Just So He Can Stand!

TODAY we take beefcake art of any male star under the age of 50," said a studio publicity man recently. "Just as long as he can stand up, that's all we ask!"

Beefcake!

he-men are stripping off their shirts

There are even a few secrets to the beefcake trade. One is to fill an actor's navel with putty, then cover it with make-up. Shot from a low angle, the actor will seem tall as Goliath, brawny as Gorgeous George.

What do the stars think about it?

"Most of them don't mind it," said one studio photographer. "But you have to approach them cautiously. After all, you don't know in advance just what's under that padded jacket."

● John Payne is much in favor. "I like bare-chested movie roles. Acting comes more naturally that way."

● Victor Mature, whose chest has embellished as many screen dramas as any in Hollywood, agrees. "It's a great American pastime for men to shed their shirts."

● Jane Greer dissents: "The whole business is silly. It's as though I were to play a prize-fighter. After all, this is one field in which women are supreme."

● Robert Ryan goes even farther. In the future, he says, the only thing he will take off for a picture is his wristwatch. He was nominated one of Hollywood's ten best undressed men by a national magazine—and hates the title.

● Barbara Stanwyck thinks beefcake has its good points. "After all," she says, "the world is full of men whose shoulders slope, whose collar bones stick out, whose chests dip and whose stomachs protrude. A few good, expansive male chests on the screen might inspire some of these men to get in shape. It'd make their wives happy." Which could be the last word.

OPPONENT of stripped-down pictures is Robert Ryan. His gripe: inclusion as one of Hollywood's "best undressed men."

REPORTS THE RESEARCH WHICH PROVES*
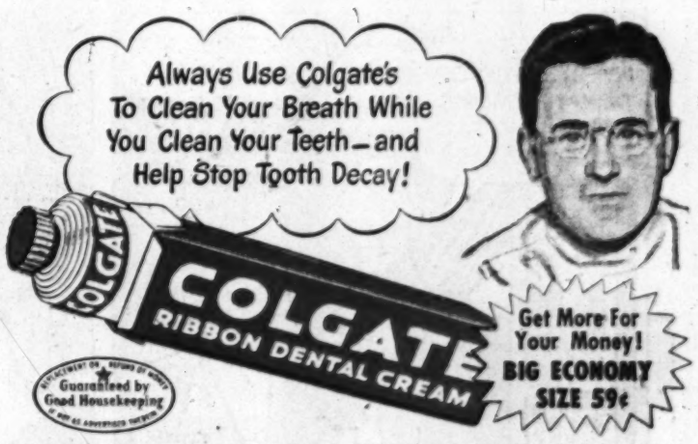
Brushing Teeth Right After Eating with COLGATE DENTAL CREAM STOPS TOOTH DECAY BEST

Better Than Any Other Way of Preventing Tooth Decay According to Published Reports!

READ JULY READER'S DIGEST for the results of one of the most extensive experiments in dental history! The toothpaste used in this research was Colgate Dental Cream. And read this, too: Results showed brushing teeth right after eating with Colgate Dental Cream stopped decay best! Better than any other home method of oral hygiene! Yes, the Colgate way stopped more decay for more people than ever before reported in dentifrice history!

NO OTHER TOOTHPASTE OR POWDER—AMMONIATED OR NOT—OFFERS PROOF OF SUCH RESULTS! Over a two-year period, leading scientists found no new cavities whatever for more than one out of three who used Colgate Dental Cream as directed. Think of it! Not even one new cavity in two full years! No other dentifrice has proof of such results—the best ever reported for a dentifrice of any type!

SO START YOUR FAMILY ON COLGATE DENTAL CREAM TODAY! By the time they enter school, 9 out of 10 children have one or more decayed teeth. Children love Colgate's wake-up flavor, so it's easy to get them to use Colgate Dental Cream correctly. No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But the Colgate way is the most effective way yet known to help your dentist prevent tooth decay!



*COLGATE DENTAL CREAM WAS USED EXCLUSIVELY IN THIS SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH.

PIXIE PUZZLE ADVENTURES

by Matt Curzon

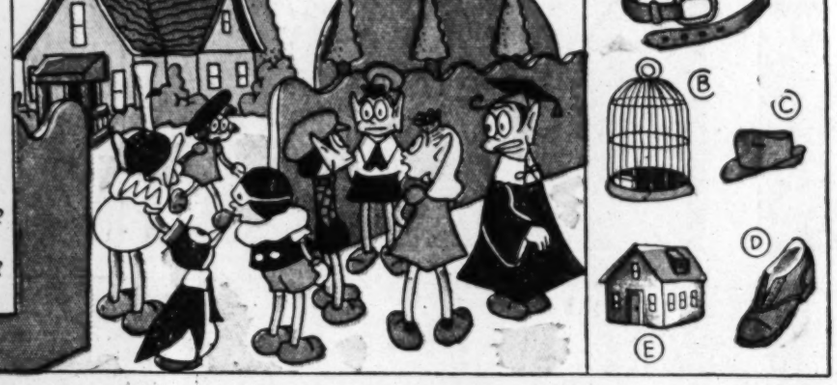
1 WHEN THE DOCTOR TELLS THE PIXIES THE PATIENT WILL BE ALL RIGHT, THEY LEAVE HIS OFFICE CONTENTED.

"ARE WE ALL HERE?" ASKS WIZZIE.

"NO," SAYS QUEENIE. "MAIZIE IS MISSING. I WONDER WHERE SHE IS?"

HOW FAST ARE YOU IN FINDING MISSING THINGS? WHAT IS MISSING IN EACH OBJECT ON YOUR RIGHT.



2 "THERE SHE IS!" CRIES CLOUDY, "NEAR THE DOCTOR'S DOOR, BUT I CAN'T TELL IF SHE IS GOING IN OR COMING OUT."

"SOMETHING MUST BE WRONG," SAYS WIZZIE. "LET'S GO OVER AND SEE IF WE CAN HELP."

CLOUDY COULDN'T TELL IF MAIZIE WAS COMING IN OR GOING OUT. HERE ARE TWO OBJECTS NEAR DOORS. IF PEOPLE WERE WEARING THEM WOULD THEY BE GOING IN OR OUT?

3 BY THE TIME THE PIXIES REACH MAIZIE, THEY FIND SHE HAS FAINTED. WHAT WOULD YOU DO IF YOU WERE FACED WITH THIS SITUATION? WHAT PROCEDURE WOULD YOU FOLLOW TO REVIVE MAIZIE?

a. STAND HER UP, AND SPRINKLE HER FACE WITH WATER.

b. PLACE HER HEAD LOWER THAN THE REST OF HER BODY.

c. PLACE HER HANDS ON TOP OF HER HEAD AND GIVE HER SOME WATER TO DRINK.

4 "MAIZIE! WHAT HAPPENED?" ASKS QUEENIE. "SPEAK UP, MAIZIE," CRIES FEE FEE. "WHAT DID YOU SEE?"

MAIZIE BEGINS TO SPEAK IN A LOW VOICE.

"I'LL WRITE OUT WHAT SHE IS SAYING," WIZZIE TELLS THEM, "IN THE INTERNATIONAL PHONETIC ALPHABET."

ON THE RIGHT ARE THE SYMBOLS THAT WIZZIE WROTE AND ON THE LEFT ARE THE MEANINGS OF EACH SYMBOL. SEE IF YOU CAN MAKE OUT WHAT MAIZIE IS SAYING
